The School of Music is a treasured unit of the College of Fine and Applied Arts (FAA) at Illinois. Its faculty and students are some of the most respected on the entire campus, and they remain incredibly productive despite the financial difficulties that face the University. Indeed, this issue of sonorities, the news magazine of the School of Music, comes to you in what will undoubtedly be a pivotal year in our efforts to ensure a sustainable future for the College.

I say “pivotal” because of the important choices that we will need to make to secure that future. In the dean’s office and in our units, we will look at the broad spectrum of activities as we design the kind of college we want to be. As we do so, I want to assure you that we will be guided by our core values: excellence in teaching and research, inclusivity, appreciation for the arts of the past, and innovation in environmental design and fine arts for the future.

We must also sustain FAA’s commitment to active engagement in society. As you know, our students and faculty go beyond the classroom to produce music in the real world, because engagement with the public provides crucial experiential learning opportunities and fosters creative approaches to problem solving. Each year, for example, students in the performing arts work with master teachers from around the world and perform not only at Krannert Center but also in numerous venues across America. At the same time, hundreds of students from Urban and Regional Planning, Landscape Architecture, and Architecture conduct “action research” in East St. Louis. Graphic design students produce the nationally prominent literary magazine Ninth Letter. The University’s impressive second-place finish in the International Solar Decathlon competition in Washington, D.C., was based on a house designed and built largely by our FAA students and faculty. The students participating in these projects leave the University with unsurpassed project-management skills, ready to influence the world in positive ways.

Many of the friends and alumni of the School of Music have been generous supporters of these efforts, and I want to take this opportunity to thank them for their significant contributions to our mission.

Robert Graves
Dean, College of Fine and Applied Arts
The 2010-2011 academic year has been a mix of successes and challenges, which we’ve met with both joy and reflection.

Recent faculty achievements include two Grammys, a lifetime achievement award, and a number of outstanding performances. Baritone Nathan Gunn won a Grammy for the Virgin Classics release of Benjamin Britten’s opera Billy Budd, recorded with the London Symphony Orchestra, and conductor Eduardo Diazmuñoz won the Latin Grammy for 40 Años, his four-disc set commemorating the fortieth anniversary of the Orquesta Filarmónica de Bogotá. William Kinderman earned the Humboldt Foundation Award for his lifetime research in musicology. Louis Bergonzi, along with Bruce Carter of the University of Maryland, co-chaired Establishing Identity, a symposium that was the first conference to feature research on the intersection of LGBT issues and music pedagogy. Between August and mid-November, pianist Ian Hobson presented the Legacy of Chopin and Schumann, a series of 10 piano recitals at New York City’s historic Dicapo Opera Theatre. The Pacifica String Quartet is performing the complete Shostakovich Quartets in its second season with the Metropolitan Museum of Art. In early September, Yvonne Gonzales Redman, Dmitry Kouzov, and Julie Gunn premiered our first commissioned work, Reynold Tharp’s Anima Liberata, for a full house at the Allerton Music Barn Festival. The piece and performance earned outstanding reviews. In addition to expanding their experiences and careers, the successes of our faculty illuminate the halls of our school with hope and beauty. They inspire our students. They keep us focused on our commitment to excellence.

Like many other institutions across the nation, we have had to scrutinize our budgets and tighten our belts to ensure the long-term viability of our precious school. In some cases, examining what we do and how we do things has helped us to become more efficient. For example, the faculty shares financial and intellectual resources within and between departments now more than ever to yield better results in the classroom and on stage. This challenge, although difficult at times, has changed us for the better. It has brought us closer to our colleagues. It has turned us into artistic conservationists.

On behalf of the School of Music, I wish our dear friend and colleague Edward Rath, associate director for academic affairs, the very best in his retirement after 22 years. Ed has been my right hand and adviser since I joined the School of Music in 2002. We thank him for his significant contribution to the school, for his ability to solve problems thoughtfully, and his consistently good-natured approach to everything he’s done for us.

Despite our challenges, we look forward to progressive changes and events that will enrich our university and our school. They include finding a new chancellor, provost, and faculty members who will share their knowledge and expertise with our students. Through the generosity of the Lorado Taft Lectureship Fund, we will be gathering masters in the electronic music field in March 2011. Bell Laboratories acoustician Max Mathews (who is known as the “Father of Computer Music”), composer Jean-Claude Risset, and composer John Chowning will give lectures, perform, and visit with our students and faculty during an informal four-day seminar. It is with these and other enlightening activities in mind that the UI School of Music welcomes and moves into the New Year.

Continued Grammy Success for Faculty and Alums

Aaron Ziegel, Contributing Writer

Just one year after the Pacifica Quartet brought home a Grammy statuette for Best Chamber Music Performance, The Recording Academy once again recognized the contributions of School of Music faculty and alumni at the 52nd Annual Grammy Awards, presented in Los Angeles on January 31, 2010. The Virgin Classics release of Benjamin Britten’s maritime opera Billy Budd, featuring voice faculty member and alumnus Nathan Gunn (B.M. ‘94) in the title role, claimed this year’s prize for Best Opera Recording. Gunn considers the role to be “the cornerstone of my operatic career”; it has occupied a central place in his repertory for much of the past decade.

The opera was recorded live in concert in December 2007. Conductor Daniel Harding led the London Symphony Orchestra and the men of the London Symphony Chorus. Ian Bostridge, Gidon Saks, and Neal Davies portrayed the other principal roles, while UI alum Daniel Teadt (B.M. ’98, M.M. ’00) sang the role of Donald, one of Billy Budd’s shipmates. The Grammy win is a significant career milestone for Teadt—this is his opera-recording debut.

Recordings from two other alumni received Grammy nominations this year. Composer George Crumb (M.M. ’52) earned a nomination for Best Classical Contemporary Composition with his song cycle The Winds of Destiny, which he composed in 2004. The fourth part of his American Songbook series, the work is scored for soprano, percussion quartet, and piano. The recording is on volume 13 of Bridge Records’ Complete Crumb Edition.

At the opposite end of the musical spectrum from Crumb’s uncompromisingly contemporary settings of American folk songs, Craig Hella Johnson (M.M. ’85) led his vocal group Conspirare to a nomination for Best Classical Crossover Album. The group’s Harmonia Mundi recording, A Company of Voices: Conspirare in Concert, offers a mix of recent compositions by such composers as Morten Lauridsen and Eric Whitacre; Johnson’s own arrangements of popular songs by Dolly Parton, Annie Lennox, and Carly Simon; excerpts from film scores; and other familiar standards.

“Crumb is a national treasure, and one of the very few contemporary composers whose new works are worth waiting for. These song cycles are masterpieces, plain and simple.” —David Hurwitz, ClassicsToday.com

In the opera, Billy is a young sailor with a stammer, who is falsely accused of planning a mutiny. When he finds himself unable to verbalize his defense, he violently lashes out against his accuser, killing him on the spot, a crime for which he is ultimately executed. “The music that Britten composed for the story is vivid, graphic, beautiful, and complex and links the words to the written music in such a way that they lose something if they are separated,” Gunn says. “This is the kind of music I love.”

It is fortunate to have Gunn’s realization of the character preserved in such an excellent recording, for, as the baritone himself recognizes, the role of Billy Budd offers “a summary of all my musical strengths.” This is Gunn’s second Grammy win and third nominated album.
Music Education Conference Addresses LGBT Issues
Shanta Forrest, Arts Editor, UI News Bureau

Louis Bergonzi, chair of music education in the School of Music, organized a symposium, “Establishing Identity: Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Studies and Music Education,” at the University of Illinois, May 23–26, 2010. It is believed to have been the first conference to feature research on the intersection of LGBT issues and music pedagogy. Bergonzi is a professor of instrumental music education and conductor of the Illinois Philharmonia.

Twenty-one scholars in the fields of musicology, LGBT studies, and education from the U.S., Canada, and Brazil presented their work, which will appear in the Spring 2011 issue of the School of Music’s Bulletin of the Council for Research in Music Education, published by the University of Illinois Press.

Bergonzi, who co-chaired the symposium with Bruce Carter, a professor of music education in the School of Music at the University of Maryland at College Park, first broached the topic of sexual identity and music instruction in his article “Sexual Orientation and Music Education: Continuing a Tradition,” which was published in the December 2009 issue of Music Educators Journal. In the article, Bergonzi raised questions about hetero-centrism in conventional music education and examined the ways in which it biases curricular content and marginalizes the lives and work of LGBT music teachers and students. The author noted that, although high school music students may be able to identify Pyotr Tchaikovsky as the composer of the ballet Swan Lake and George Frideric Handel as the genius behind Messiah, few, if any, students may be aware of how the composers’ masterworks were influenced by their homosexuality and the homophobia in the societies in which they lived.

“An important part of the content of what we teach—music history—has been greatly influenced by the contributions of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender composers and performers,” yet conventional music education generally excludes discussion of LGBT issues, Bergonzi said. He continued that, although such disciplines as education and musicology examine the influences of the LGBT community in their fields, conventional music instruction does not. Doing so, according to Bergonzi, would provide a more comprehensive music education and foster an inclusive environment in schools for LGBT students and their families.

Keynote speakers at the symposium included Elizabeth Gould, a professor at the University of Toronto, whose research interests include gender and sexuality; Nadine Hubbs, professor of women’s studies and of music at the University of Michigan; and Nelson Rodriguez, professor of women’s and gender studies at The College of New Jersey and a research fellow at the Paulo and Nita Freire International Project for Critical Pedagogy, Faculty of Education, at McGill University.

MILSTEAD WINS METROPOLITAN OPERA REGIONAL FINALS

Ryan Milstead, a voice student in the School of Music, won first place in the Metropolitan Opera National Council Central Region finals on November 8, 2010. He sang “Hai gia vinta la causa” from Mozart’s Le Nozze di Figaro during the first round, and “Pierrot’s Tanzlied” from Korngold’s Die Tote Stadt during the second round.

“Both pieces [were] exquisitely performed,” Ricardo Herrera, Milstead’s faculty adviser and a professor of voice, said.

Milstead outperformed 10 other singers—winners of district auditions in Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio—to take the top honors at the Music Institute of Chicago in Evanston. He and the winners of the 13 other regional competitions will advance to the national semifinals at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York on March 6, 2011. The finals will be held March 13.

A native of Okolona, Mississippi, Milstead, 25, is in the final year of the master’s degree program in vocal performance and literature.

WHAT’S UP WITH THE WEBSITE?
The School of Music website was recently inundated by a malicious software program. This malware, while not harmful to a viewer’s computer, caused irreparable damage to the main site. The University Bands and Robert E. Brown Center for World Music sites are back on line but the main SoM site must be rebuilt. This unplanned opportunity will be used to design a fresh and more user-friendly website in the coming months. Thank you for your patience and support as the School’s web presence is brought back to full splendor.

The music education division was well represented at the 2010 International Society for Music Education (ISME) World Conference, which was held in August at the China National Convention Center in Beijing, China. Presentations were made by faculty member Matthew D. Thibeault; doctoral students Michael L. Breaux, Chee Kang Koh, and Allen R. Legutki; and alumna Patricia A. González-Moreno (Ph.D. ’09).

González-Moreno also led a team of nine current and former music education doctoral students who offered the presentation “Creating, Fostering, and Maintaining Partnerships Among Junior Researchers” at the Second ISME North American Regional Seminar and Summit in Anaheim, California, March 25–27, 2010. Joining González-Moreno (now at Universidad Autónoma de Chihuahua) were Michael L. Breaux (now at New York University), Karin S. Hendricks (Ph.D. ’09), Kristi N. King, Allen R. Legutki, Margaux Bookbinder Millman, Channing A. Paluck, Tannya D. Smith, and D. Joseph Wachtel.

DOCHA FESTIVAL MAKES ITS DEBUT
April 2010 marked the inauguration of the DoCha Festival. That stands for Downtown Champaign Chamber Music Festival (www.docha.org). Showcasing internationally recognized musicians on the School of Music faculty, performing alongside students and friends from the community and beyond—for an admission price of nothing—the festival was an instant success. Presented in venues ranging from restaurants and clubs to theaters, DoCha is chamber music as it could be in the 21st century. What is chamber music? Great music for fewer than 13 people in intimate settings. The possibilities are almost endless.
Pianist Pays Tribute to Chopin and Schumann in New York Concert Series

Internationally acclaimed pianist and conductor Ian Hobson, the Swanlund Professor of Piano and a professor of music in the Center for Advanced Studies, performed a series of 10 concerts in New York City beginning in August as a tribute to two of the world’s greatest composers.

The concert series, “The Heritage and Legacy of Fryderyk Chopin (1810–1849) and Robert Schumann (1810–1856): A Series of Ten Piano Recitals,” held at the Dicapo Opera Theatre, celebrated the bicentenary of Chopin and Schumann’s births. David Dubal, a noted author, radio host, and pianist who is on the faculties of The Juilliard School and the Manhattan School of Music in New York City, provided historical commentary.

Hobson is commemorating Chopin’s birth with other projects as well, including a 16-volume set of recordings comprising Chopin’s complete works. The first eight volumes in the series were released in 2009 and in 2010, the actual bicentenary of Chopin’s birth; the remaining volumes have been recorded and will be released in the near future. Hobson performed selected works from the retrospective in a series of recitals in Lockport, Illinois, which ran through December.

One of the youngest-ever graduates of the Royal Academy of Music in London, England, Hobson won the U.S. National Chopin Competition in 1975. That same year he competed in the Chopin International Piano Competition in Warsaw, Poland; in 1981, he won the Leeds International Piano Competition. Hobson has himself served as a juror for many competitions, including the U.S. National Chopin Competition and the Schumann International Competition in Germany, and he chaired the jury for the June 2010 New York International Piano Competition. Among the more than 60 recordings Hobson has released during his career

Indian classical music and dance in Champaign schools in the spring, and another West African drumming tradition will be added.

The Center, which regards bringing world music and dance to area schoolchildren as a crucial part of its mission, expects to continue the program next year.

B. Suzanne Hassler, editor-in-chief of sonorities, was selected for a fellowship to attend the NEA’s Journalism Institute in Classical Music and Opera in New York City in October 2010. The annual institute, co-directed by András Szántó, former head of the National Arts Journalism Program, and Anya Grundmann, executive producer for NPR Music, is held at Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism. The program’s artistic director is Joseph Horowitz, the nationally recognized classical music historian and critic.

Beyond training in the history and principles of classical music and opera, the Institute prepares writers and editors for a future in which journalists work in several media. The attendees—who included critics, reporters, and editors in traditional, broadcast, and digital media from across the nation—worked with senior journalists and faculty members to improve their viewing, analytical, and writing skills. Seminars also included analysis of print and online cultural journalism and the use of interactive social media. Participants attended daily performances

NEA RECOGNIZES UI SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) has recognized two recipients at the School of Music with funding this year.

An NEA grant was awarded to UI’s Robert E. Brown Center for World Music to help support its World Music and Dance in the Schools program for 2010–2011. The nine-month program, directed by Philip Yampolsky, provides weekly classes in various world arts traditions at public schools in Champaign and Urbana. Artists and artist-associates of the Center will teach eight traditions of music and dance: Balinese gamelan (orchestral music), Balinese dance, two kinds of West African drumming, Indian dance, Indian vocal music, Indian tabla (drumming), and the Brazilian dance-and-music art form capoeira. An art taught in one school in the fall semester will be taught in a different school in the spring.

Unlike the common model of a single one-time demonstration of an exotic art, the program aims to offer sustained instruction over a full semester, giving schoolchildren the opportunity to engage directly with an artistic tradition that is almost certainly new to them. Participation not only widens their artistic horizons and enhances their skills but also teaches them important lessons about respect for other cultures.

This fall, I Ketut Gede Asnawa, who teaches Balinese gamelan at UI, taught fourth- and fifth-graders at Martin Luther King Jr. Elementary School, using a 25-piece gamelan orchestra loaned to the school by the Center. Meanwhile, Balinese dance was taught by Putu Oka Mardiani at Robeson Elementary School. Moussa Bolokada Conde, a visiting artist from Guinea who teaches West African drumming at UI, is teaching fifth-graders at Wiley Elementary as part of the school’s year-long focus on Africa; and Denis Chiaramonte, a Brazilian contra-mestre, taught capoeira at Booker T. Washington Elementary School. Three Indian artists—Subrata Bhattacharya (tabla drums), Nirmalya Roy (singing), and Gullapudi Raman Kumari (dance)—will teach...
Busy Season of Premieres for Composer Tharp

Aaron Ziegel, Contributing Writer

On September 4, 2010, the Allerton Music Barn Festival presented its first world-premiere commission: Anima Liberata, composed by Reynold Tharp, UI assistant professor of composition-theory. The work for soprano, cello, and piano, set to music texts by poet Joy Pierce Mathews that were written expressly for Tharp's use. Anima Liberata was premiered by faculty members Yvonne Gonzales Redman (soprano), Dmitry Kouzov (cello), and Julie Gunn (piano).

The commissioning of new works marks an innovative direction for the Allerton Music Barn Festival. Tharp hopes that "this part of Karl Kramer's artistic vision of the festival is only the beginning of many more years of new music by living composers adding to the stimulating diversity of Allerton's concerts."

Although Mathews provided six separate poems, Tharp sought to create a more continuous structure and joined the texts in three interconnected movements, with a cyclical return of the opening material at the work's end. The composer's multifaceted use of the cello is one of Anima Liberata's most striking musical features. It is alternately a wordless "voice" given "songs" of its own, a duet partner to the soprano, or a coloristic addition to the piano's accompanimental texture. Indeed, the concept of interconnectedness serves as the overarching theme of the whole work. The composer explains, "I tried closely to follow the moods and imagery of the poems, and the clarity of the text setting was always foremost in my mind." When conceiving Anima Liberata (the liberated soul), the idea "was to communicate the beauty of Taoist thought about the interconnectedness of all matter, the relationship between humanity and the cosmos," Mathews said. To this end, she provided poems that "celebrate the rhythms of life, with hopeful and grateful, if wistful, acceptance of life's beginnings and endings." Interconnections play out across all levels of the work—in its poetic content, formal structure, musical soundscape, and in the lyricism shared by voice and cello. The work is a noteworthy addition to the repertoire of American art song and chamber music.

Earlier in the summer, The Juilliard School of Music's New Juilliard Ensemble, conducted by Joel Sachs, presented Tharp's San Francisco Night in the opening concert of the Museum of Modern Art's Summergarden series. The July 11 performance, which marked the New York premiere, was presented outdoors at The Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Sculpture Garden, set among the modernist sculptures of Pablo Picasso, Joan Miró, and Alexander Calder. The urban noise of a midtown Manhattan evening competed with Tharp's musical reflection upon a nocturnal San Francisco Bay but apparently did not detract from the music. The New York Times critic Steve Smith hailed the work as "a winner," praising its "elegant, airy and weightless figurations" that "made you eager to hear more from Mr. Tharp."

The origin of San Francisco Night can be traced back to 2006. Tharp recalls how he was "watching the evening fog roll in on the last day of a visit to San Francisco" and was reminded of a similarly inspired work by composer György Ligeti. The next morning Tharp learned of Ligeti's death. The "chance association of San Francisco fog and the melancholy of loss became the starting point for my San Francisco Night," he said. The work employs a unique eight-instrument chamber ensemble made up of flute, clarinet, horn, trumpet, vibraphone, piano, violin, and cello. Yet in Tharp's intricate scoring, the ensemble creates a sound world more akin to an orchestra in miniature than to chamber music.

Across its single-movement span, the composer manipulates simple rising and falling contours—often overlapping and passed among the various instruments at different rhythmic speeds—to create what he describes as "intricately detailed, floating textures...that recall the spreading fog." Whereas the more recent Anima Liberata pursues a vocally oriented lyricism, the earlier work focuses instead on the coloristic effects of timbre and texture.

The strong New York reception for Tharp's composition led to an invitation from conductor Joel Sachs to compose a piece for the full instrumentation of the New Juilliard Ensemble to be premiered in a subsequent season. Other current projects include a duo for flute and harp, written for faculty members Jonathan Keeble (flute) and Ann Yeung (harp).
A CRITICAL INVESTMENT IN THE FUTURE OF MUSIC

As we continue our efforts to support the School of Music during Brilliant Futures: The Campaign for the University of Illinois, we are inspired by the many alumni and friends who choose to make a difference for our talented students and faculty through generous financial contributions. Significant decreases in state support combined with rising tuition costs make private contributions even more critical to our ability to recruit and retain the most talented students and faculty and to maintain our reputation as one of the leading music schools in the country.

With ongoing economic uncertainty, we truly appreciate our alumni, friends, and volunteers who give their time and financial resources to the School, and we are especially grateful for our thriving partnership with the School of Music’s fund-raising board, the National Advisory Council. Since the Council’s inception in 2007, its members have provided significant gifts in support of scholarships, special programs, and local and national fund-raising events. We are thankful for their generous leadership.

We are also thrilled to announce the creation of several new gifts to the School of Music and to University of Illinois Bands, which demonstrate how donor support contributes to providing the highest level of professional music training and academic resources for our students and faculty.

Linda Allen Anderson established the Gerald and Linda Anderson Scholarship in Music Education at the $115K level, in memory of her husband, UI School of Music alumnus Gerald E. Anderson (B.M.E. ’57, M.S. ’59). He taught and conducted at the University of California, Los Angeles, from 1979 to 1995.

David A. Bruns established a planned gift, The David Bruns Endowed Fund for University of Illinois Bands, of $70K for unrestricted support of the University Bands.

Michael Hibberd and Nancy Bartkowiak created the Joe Bartkowiak Memorial Scholarship, a $25K fund for incoming freshmen, with a preference given to students studying trumpet performance. This memorial was established through a combined pledge agreement and outright gift made in memory of Joe Bartkowiak by his close friend, Michael Hibberd, and Mrs. Bartkowiak’s wife, Nancy.

Dr. Sheila C. Johnson fulfilled her gift pledge to establish the Daniel J. Perrino Chair in Music Education and provided funding towards the Susan J. Starrett Chair in Violin. The School of Music plans to initiate the Perrino Chair in the fall of 2011. A portion of the gift to fund the Susan J. Starrett Chair in Violin will be used to provide scholarships to School of Music students from underrepresented groups and/or students with significant financial need.

Glen and Krista Strauss made a gift commitment of $25K toward the Allerton Music Barn Festival. To date, they have committed $75K toward Allerton Barn.

Virginia and Paul Uhlenhop provided funding at the Prodigy Sponsorship Level for Advocates for Young Artists, a scholarship program for music students, and to the University Bands annual giving campaign.

As we approach the final year of the Brilliant Futures campaign, we invite you to consider how you will make a difference in the lives of music students at the University of Illinois. While scholarships and fellowships represent our greatest need, gifts of all sizes have a significant impact. Whether you choose to give to the Annual Fund, provide funding for a specific program, or establish a bequest, your support is a critical investment in future generations of scholars, musicians, and music educators. provide both student performers and audience members with operatic experiences comparable to those found in major cities, while keeping ticket prices reasonable. There are several specific giving opportunities available for opera sponsorship each season.

The Robert E. Brown Center for World Music: This is a new institute within the School of Music. Its mission is to bring visiting artists in world music traditions to campus for extended periods to teach and demonstrate their arts to the University community, area schoolchildren, and the community at large. The underlying premise of the Center’s work is that serious involvement in the music of any culture will foster respect and admiration for the culture itself. In 2010–2011, the Center is offering University classes in Mande percussion music, Balinese gamelan, and Chinese instrumental music. It is also offering an evening Balinese gamelan class that is free of charge to the entire community. (Currently, the members of the Community Gamelan range in age from eight to 65.) Another crucial part of the Center’s work is its program—partially supported by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts—to send artists to teach semester-long classes in world music and dance traditions in area public schools. Start-up funding for the Center came from the University, but ongoing funding from outside sources is necessary.

We hope you will consider making a gift. If you are interested in funding projects such as these or would like to explore other opportunities, please contact the School of Music’s Advancement Office at (217) 244-4119.

Beautiful Music Together

Like the steady beating of a bass drum that carries the rhythm of the band, the School of Music can count on Fern Hodge Armstrong to provide support that underscores student success. Mrs. Armstrong, who received a scholarship while attending the School, graduated in 1952. Years later, she and her husband, John, a 1950 engineering graduate, envisioned a plan to provide annual financial support that would affect the lives of aspiring musicians. They established the John D. and Fern Hodge Armstrong Competition for Outstanding Undergraduate Performance.

Twenty-three years later, it is one of the top competitions within the School. Select juniors and seniors are nominated by their teachers to compete in a live performance for the honor and $1,000 prize. “The benefits from this award have been priceless,” says Luis Bellorin, a senior viola major and winner of the 2010 Armstrong Competition. “[I gained] confidence in myself that I could put my head down and work hard…then be able to do a live competition and…showcase my strengths and my personal playing style to be able to win.”

The Armstrongs’ generosity and ongoing involvement has been instrumental to the competition’s success. The couple has supported the award with an annual gift, and each year Mrs. Armstrong drives from their Rockford home to meet the winners. “Fern Armstrong has been so kind,” Bellorin said. “She sent me a congratulatory letter after she learned of the winners, and I was able to meet her and express my utmost gratitude for helping to establish a scholarship fund like this.”

He adds, “The experience and knowledge that I was able to gain from this competition will be with me for the rest of my career. I think we are very fortunate to have donors who support the younger generation of students.” Bellorin, who studies with Masumi Per Rostad, violist of the Pacifica Quartet, is currently preparing his repertoire for graduate school auditions this winter. He would like to continue his studies by entering a master’s degree program in viola performance in the fall of 2011.

A SALUTE TO OPERA AT ILL

By Thomas H. Schleis and B. Suzanne Hasler

Maestro Eduardo Díazmuñoz prepares Art Joslin for his debut as Rigoletto in an Opera at Illinois production in the Tryon Festival Theatre at Krannert Center for the Performing Arts (November 4, 2010).

Feature photography by Laurent Gasquet.
As art historian Kenneth Clark noted, “What is too silly to be said may be sung—well, yes; but what is too subtle to be said, or too deeply felt, or too revealing or too mysterious—these things can also be sung and can only be sung.”

Although the School of Music began producing operettas and opera scenes as early as 1931, through occasional affiliations with the Illini Theatre Guild, opera was first introduced into the formal music curriculum at the University of Illinois only in the late 1940s. Begun under the vigorous leadership of Ludwig Zirner (1906–1971), Opera at Illinois continues as one of the shining jewels in the crown of the School of Music.
After World War II, interest in the study and performance of opera in the United States, especially at the university level, dramatically increased. The Opera Workshop movement dates from that time, and Illinois was an early leader in the movement. Scenes from operas, presented in English with minimal sets and costumes, emphasized theatrical as well as musical values. The workshop movement, in general—and Zirner’s pioneering efforts at the University of Illinois, in particular—presented opera to a new audience that was eager to discover its myriad pleasures.

The first public presentation of opera scenes at Illinois, offered on May 2, 1949, included Menotti’s The Old Maid and the Thief (scene i), with piano accompaniment by Jack Neuhaus, and Puccini’s La Bohème (Act IV), accompanied by Grace Wilson. The performances were presented on a mostly bare concert stage in Smith Hall, which lacked even a curtain. Zirner hoped that these limitations—in addition to the absence of an orchestra—would stimulate the performers’ interpretative imaginations and would ideally lead to a more expressive and sincere performance. Evidently his goals were fulfilled, because a critic for the Daily Illini wrote that “the performers seemed to live their parts.” A review in the Champaign News-Gazette recalled that everyone from the directors to the stage hands received enthusiastic curtain calls.

Eric Dalheim, former chair of the accompanying division, provides this wonderful anecdote about Grace Wilson: “One summer, long BAC [before air-conditioning] in Smith Recital Hall, with outer doors open and large fans running, we were taking turns at the piano (placed next to the organ), accompanying a performance of opera scenes. Two of our less-than-stellar singers were in the midst of a dramatic excerpt, when a large-ish dog trotted down the center [aisle] barking aggressively. I was at the keyboard. The singers stopped, I stopped, the dog barked, and a member of the sweltering audience removed Fido to laughter and applause. It was at this juncture that Grace, who possessed, for those of us who knew her, a droll sense of humor, leaned toward me and said: ‘A music critic, no doubt!’ This sent me into spasms of laughter, which only gradually subsided as we restarted and finished the scene. Only later did I ponder: Did she mean the dog or its remover? When asked later, her only reply was an enigmatic smile.”

Throughout his tenure at Illinois, from 1946 to 1971, Zirner, along with his wife, Laura, would present fascinating productions of operas by composers as varied as Monteverdi and Mozart, Pergolesi and Puccini, Verdi and Richard Strauss. He would coach the performers and stage, translate, and conduct the operas, while she would design the sets and costumes. A generation of opera-goers cherishes the memory of the Zirners’ production of Strauss’s Ariadne auf Naxos at Smith Hall in 1961.

For the final week of the University of Illinois’s year-long centennial celebration in 1968, the Zirners received special funding from the Illinois Arts Council to stage a new production of Gunther Schuller’s The Visitation... at the Assembly Hall. Written for an 80-piece orchestra supplemented by a seven-piece jazz ensemble, Schuller’s score amalgamated elements of classical music with contemporary jazz. The University of Illinois was the first university opera program to stage this highly controversial new work, which confronted issues of race, tolerance, and human rights at the peak of the civil rights and antiwar movements on campuses nationwide. “It was chosen,” Zirner said in an interview with Ebony magazine in June 1968, “because it had an ethical message related to our times. Presentation of the opera was a matter of expressing what might be an unpleasant truth, but this is the sort of creative role that a university should play.” The performance was conducted by the composer (then president of the New England Conservatory of Music), with the cast of more than 50 singers led by guest artist Simon Estes in the role of Carter Jones.

Following the opening of Krannert Center for the Performing Arts in 1969, Zirner offered a production of Wagner’s Das Rheingold, designed by Wolf Siegfried Wagner, great-grandson of Richard and Cosima Wagner. The production was noted for the extensive use of rolling platforms, a novelty at the time. Among the cast was the fine young baritone William Stone (M.M. ’68, Ph.D. ’79), who went on to a prominent career as a professional opera singer.

From 1946 to 1974, Laura Zirner, who had received her formal training in the visual arts in Vienna, contributed not only to opera production at Illinois but also to the evolution of theatrical design more widely through her experimentation with the use of abstracted period costumes and simplified scenic elements, which she referred to as “units.” Her development of the concept of unit sets (a single setting that could represent a variety of locales), coordinated with costume pieces pared down to fundamental or essential design elements, grew out of the need to produce cost-effective and easily changeable scenery for the School’s post–World War II opera workshops. Her innovative ideas were disseminated in a book, Costuming for the Modern Stage, published by the University of Illinois Press in June 1957, and through her work at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, where she designed and coordinated opera productions during the summers from 1952 to 1957. The American tenor and stage director David Lloyd, who worked with the Ziners at Tanglewood, later recalled that the “versatility of her designs made it possible to put on many more productions in a summer. It was a great national contribution.”

Lloyd’s presence on the Urbana campus from 1971 to 1986, in his post as artistic director of the opera division, heralded a glorious period for opera at Illinois. With singers such as Jerry Hadley (M.M. ’77), Eric Mills (M.M. ’77), Eric Halfvarson (B.M. ’74, M.M. ’76), and Kallen Esperian (B.M. ’84), Lloyd presented seasons that included Stravinsky’s The Rake’s Progress (May 1971 and April–May 1976) and Massenet’s Manon (July and September 1977), both directed by Adelaide Bishop; Puccini’s Tosca (October–November 1977) and Gounod’s Faust (April 1979), directed by Nicholas DiVirgilio; and his own memorable production of Dominick Argento’s Postcard from Morocco (February–March 1985).

When Lloyd left Illinois to direct the opera program at The Juilliard School, the University hired Mark Flint, a dynamic young conductor. Audiences will remember Flint’s visually stunning Falstaff (October–November 1986), directed by Lou Galterio, which featured voice professor Ronald Hedlund in the title role, as well as a sensitively conducted La Bohème (April 1987) in Italian with supertitles (their first use at Illinois), directed by Bernard Uzan. The 1989-1990 season began with the nine-month appointment of conductor Richard Boldrey, formerly of the Chicago Lyric Opera, as chair of the opera division. Boldrey, whose expertise was in the teaching of young singers, left at the end of the academic year to assume a position at the University of Colorado at Boulder. He is known for a beautiful production of Puccini’s seldom-heard La Rondine (November 1989), directed by DiVirgilio, and a controversial Cosi fan tutte (April 1990), directed by Tom Rowan and set in India in 1906.

The arrival of Kurt Klippstatter in 1990 brought an increased emphasis on opera as drama. Using both in-house and guest directors and designers, he set high standards for excellence. Following his first production, Le nozze di Figaro, in November 1990, he produced Scott Joplin’s Treemonisha, with Ollie Watts Davis singing the title role, in February 1991. In the fall of that year, in honor of the 200th anniversary of the death of Mozart, he presented musicology professor Nicholas Temperley’s Act I completion and orchestration of L’oca del Cairo on a double bill with Stravinsky’s Le Rossignol. Just before this production, L’oca del Cairo was sung in a concert version at the national American Musicological Society meeting in Chicago, and it was later revived on stage at the Orquesta Sinfónica del Sodre, in Montevideo, Uruguay, with Carlos Weiske conducting in August 2002.

One of the high points of Klippstatter’s tenure was the production of Dominick Argento’s The Aspern Papers (February 1994), directed by Robert DeSimone of The University of Texas at Austin. Argento’s libretto was based on the nouvelle by Henry James, although it makes the title character a composer rather than an author. Illinois, once again, took the lead as the first university opera program to stage this lyrical masterpiece, which had received its professional premiere in Dallas in 1988. The Illinois cast included Amy Fuller (M.M. ’95), Nathan Gunn (B.M. ’94), Martín Solá (M.M. ’94), John Bellemer (M.M. ’94), and Layna Chianakas (M.M. ’98). DeSimone asked for a unit set of large platforms painted to resemble music manuscripts and arranged at various angles. The production, which ended with a spectacular fire achieved through special lighting effects, was well-received by both critics and audience.

In the summer of 1994, an interesting double bill of Menotti’s The Medium, with mezzo-soprano Mignon Dunn in the title role, and Donizetti’s rarely heard The Prima Donna’s Mother Is a Drag (or Le convenienze ed inconvenienze teatrali) with Hedlund in the lead role of a stage mother from Hell, both delighted and chilled the audience.
Mozart’s Don Giovanni in February 1996 featured costumes from La Scala in Milan, while Madama Butterfly in November of that year was designed and directed by Shozo Sato in the Kabuki style. One of the signature touches of Sato’s design was a red curtain that dropped dramatically as the orchestra sounded the final chord. In honor of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Francis Poulenc, the opera division presented his Dialogues of the Carmelites in February 1999. This powerful opera, which tells the story of a group of Carmelite nuns who take the vow of martyrdom during the French Revolution, is a work that challenges any opera company. It had its premiere at La Scala in 1957. Productions soon followed in Paris, Vienna, and London. At Illinois, two strong casts, under the direction of Richard Barrett, brought this drama to life, especially the powerful final scene in which, one by one, the nuns are guillotined and, one by one, their voices cease to be heard.

In 1999, Klippstatter took a position at Northwestern University. During the next five years—before the appointment of Eduardo Diazmuñoz in 2004—the opera division was guided by the Opera Coordinating Committee. Using resident and guest conductors such as Donald Schleicher, Michel Singher, and Steven Crawford, and resident and guest directors DiVirgilio, June Card, and Lincoln Clark, the committee insured that a high level of musical and dramatic achievement would be maintained.

Rossini’s Il barbiere di Siviglia—a spirited production that included flying sheep—opened the 1999–2000 season, followed in February 2000 by an idiomatic production of Britten’s Albert Herring, conducted by Ian Hobson and directed by Stephen Fiol. Debussy’s operatic masterpiece Pelléas et Mélisande, directed by DeSimone and conducted by Schleicher, set a high mark for production values—robotic lighting, flying scenery, and stunning visual effects—coupled with superb singing and playing of this demanding score.

Schleicher also conducted Card’s productions of Le nozze di Figaro in February 2001 and Così fan tutte in November of that year. In February 2002, Offenbach’s Les Contes d’Hoffmann was given a spectacular scenic production. Conducted with great authority by Singher and directed by DiVirgilio, it boasted a cast that included Darren Anderson (M.M. ’03), Stephanie Chigas, Ben Copeland, Brent W. Davis (M.M. ’02), Chadley Ballantyne (M.M. ’03), and Elizabeth Antle. Chester Alwes, professor of choral music, was chorus master and also appeared in the production.

The 2003–2004 season opened with a Puccini double bill, Suor Angelica and Gianni Schicchi. They were given a visually beautiful staging, and DiVirgilio brought out the suffering of Sister Angelica by his sensitive direction—it was his last production at Illinois. The wonderful comedy of Schicchi fairly glowed (it even had another cameo by Alwes as a very dead corpse). Diazmuñoz’s conducting of these late Puccini works had great authority. His mastery was confirmed later in the season by the production of Sondheim’s Sweeney Todd. Visually, the production captured the sooty, grimy, crime-filled streets of 19th-century London, and Fiol directed a cast that included far too many talented people to list here. The cast and orchestra responded to the demands of this difficult score, and very few who were in the audience will forget the stunned silence at the end of the evening. For the final ten minutes, no coughs were heard, no candy unwrapped; all attention was directed to the stage. The season ended with Purcell’s *The Fairy Queen, which marked the first time Charlotte Mattax Moersch, chair of the School’s organ and harpsichord division, worked with the opera program.

Jacques Trussel directed a delightfully controversial production of Don Giovanni in November 2004, leading the cast to a better understanding of the intricacies of Mozart’s secco recitative. A sumptuous production of Leonard Bernstein’s operetta Candide followed in February 2005. Jerry Hadley, who had recorded the title role under the direction of the composer, returned to his alma mater to assume a variety of roles on stage, and Diazmuñoz, a student of the composer, conducted. Fiol served as stage director, Alwes was chorus master, and the audience traveled the globe, looking for “the best of all possible worlds.”

Keys directed an elegant production of La traviata in November 2005, with costumes designed by James Berton Harris. This was followed by a double bill of Ravel’s comedy L’Heure espagnole paired with Falla’s La vida breve, both directed by Fiol. A collaboration with the dance department and the New Music Ensemble resulted in a second double bill that season: Stravinsky’s L’Histoire du soldat, with choreography by Rebecca Nettl-Fiol, and the Weill and Brecht Mahagonny-Songspiel, directed by Michael Scholar. David Warfel designed a high-tech set that established a new way of approaching operatic production at Illinois.

Warfel’s design team, which included dramaturg Katherine Syer and technologists Roy Campbell and Guy Garnett, began with a strong interest in minimizing costs through advanced technology—in this instance, through the use of projections. A large-scale projection piece had never been done at Illinois, and the resident producers of KCPA felt it was time. Using equipment that the Center already owned, Warfel put together a system that required five operators, four computers, and four projectors to display hundreds of images for the two operas, all of which—including the operators—was exposed onstage in an attempt to reveal the technological underpinnings of the production. Although the initial experimentation was labor-intensive, it led directly to investment by the Center in technologies that allowed the creative staff to use multiple projectors with greater ease and... at less expense in future productions. Virtually every show that has utilized projections at Illinois since then has used technology purchased as a result of experimentation for those operas. Local community productions have also benefited from the development of the more cost-effective electronic sce- nography, including a co-production of The Nutcracker by the Champaign-Urbana Ballet and Sinfonia da Camera in 2007.

In honor of the 75th anniversary of the College of Fine and Applied Arts in 2006, a gala production of Bernstein’s Mass was presented in Foellinger Great Hall. Reflecting its subtitle, “A Theatre Piece for Singers, Players, and Dancers,” Mass enlisted performers from the theatre and dance departments, along with the School of Music. Lighting effects turned the Great Hall into a church, and Eric Stone designed a high altar that was placed at the top of a ramp, separating the orchestra into two sections. Bernstein’s score, which calls for a large orchestra, various choruses, an expanded percussion section, and prerecorded music, focuses on the crisis of faith suffered by the Celebrant, sung by baritone Ricardo Herrera. James Zager directed the action, and John Dayger choreographed. The combined choruses were prepared by Chet Alves and Fred Stoltzfus. As the final words of the celebrant were spoken, “Go in Peace,” there was a hush in the audience that lasted several seconds.

Of course, there are many other productions to speak of: Jerold Siena’s Madama Butterfly (February 2007), Fiol’s production of Joseph Turrini’s The Scarecrow (April 2007), Key’s La Bohème (November 2007), and Kathleen Conlin’s Così fan tutte (February 2008). Each of these productions featured superb singing, excellent direction, and beautifully executed scenery.

One of the high points of the 2008–2009 season was the production of Daniel Catán’s Rappaccini’s Daughter (February 2009), performed in the presence of the composer. Diazmuñoz had previously conducted the world premiere, American premiere, and Manhattan School of Music premiere of this work. Directed at Illinois by Fiol, with brilliant sets and costumes by DeAnne Kennedy and Su Min Kim, it captured the horror of Rappaccini’s vision of a new world order. Strongly sung by two gifted casts, it met with Catán’s approval.

In the spring of 2009, School of Music alumnus Neely Bruce (M.M. ’66, D.M.A. ’71) returned to campus with a unique approach to Hansel and Gretel. His fascination with so many different musical styles—lyric opera, folk song, jazz, rock, rap, and disco—were reflected in his original score and proved to be a delight for both cast and audience (especially since the audience was asked to sing along, guided by Dennis Helmrich’s supertitles).

The 2009–2010 season was typical of the type of season that Diazmuñoz programs: 1) a standard repertoire item—Mozart’s Le nozze di Figaro; 2) a work by an American composer—Richard Rodgers’s South Pacific; and 3) a chamber work—Britten’s Albert Herring. The 2010–2011 season follows a similar pattern, with Verdi’s Rigoletto, Mitch Leigh’s Man of La Mancha, and Cavalli’s La Calisto, La Calisto will be conducted by Charlotte Mattax Moersch, and follows her three earlier collaborations with the opera pro- gram: Purcell’s The Fairy Queen (April 2004); Monteverdi’s L’incoronazione di Poppea (April 2005); and Lully’s Armide (April 2008).

Although it should strike the reader as a given, there could be no opera program at Illinois without a gifted, enthusiastic, and inspired voice fac- ulty; an outstanding orchestra; a supportive administration; and a superb facility. Many readers will remember James Bailey, Dorothy Clark, Mark Elyn, Bruce Foote, William Miller, William Warfield, and Grace Wilson of the voice faculty; the superb coaches Eric Dalheim, George Reeves, Paul Ulanowsky, and John Wustman; and conductors Richard Aslanian, Bernard Goodman, George Hunter, Tonu Kalama, Sergei Pavlov, and Paul Vermel.

The current members of the voice faculty come to rehearsals, listen to auditions, and impart their many years of wisdom to their charges. Helmrich and Julie Gunn take an active interest in training coaches for the opera division, and Helmrich also provides insightful, lyrical supertitles for Opera at Illinois audiences that often illuminate subtle meanings and dra- matic nuances in the original librettos.

As a direct result of a non-credit class about the production of Così fan tutte that Tom Schleis taught in the spring of 1990, an operatic support group was formed, with Philip Brown as its first president. Illinois Opera Theatre Enthusiasts (IOTE) proudly celebrates its 20th anniversary in 2010, under the dedicated leadership of Phyllis Cline. Activities of IOTE include the publication Opera Newslines, scholarship support; the IOTE Awards for Excellence; a transportation fund for travel to attend dress rehearsals at the Lyric Opera of Chicago; an annual picnic (and greatly anticipated “Trivia” challenge); and yearly sponsorship of a mainstage production. This season, IOTE sponsored Rigoletto in November. Over the course of the past twenty seasons, the group has raised in excess of $115,000 in support of the opera program at Illinois.

Krannert Center for the Performing Arts is unrivaled for excellence as a facility at the university level and has a staff devoted to the best in operatic production. Finally, the directors of the School of Music, from the time of the Zinners to the current administration of Dr. Karl Kramer, have been firm supporters of operatic activities at Illinois, knowing that a strong program attracts gifted young artists to campus.

Thomas Schleis is manager and principal coach of the opera program at Illinois. Suzanne Hassler is editor-in-chief of sonorities and a fellow of the NEA Journalism Institute in Classical Music and Opera. The authors gratefully acknowledge Craig Bradley, Phyllis Cline, Eric Dalheim, Nicholas Temperley, the University Archives, and David Warfel for contributions to this article.
WHO OR WHAT TELLS YOU WHO YOU ARE?

By Joseph R. Flummerfelt

Distinguished alumnus Dr. Joseph Flummerfelt (D.M.A. ’71) delivered the address that follows at the School of Music Commencement Convocation held on the Urbana campus on May 16, 2010.

First, may I offer my hearty congratulations to each member of the graduating class for the significant accomplishment that this day celebrates. I am deeply honored to have been asked to be part of a ceremony in the School of Music that played such an important role in my own evolution as a musician. I spent two very happy years at the University of Illinois in the early 1960s and, far too many years later, finally finished my dissertation. More recently I spent some days on this campus working with the doctoral students in choral conducting and performing the Brahms Requiem—certainly, for me, another memorable connection with the School of Music.

In my years in academia, I have had the opportunity to be involved in more than 40 commencements. From this experience, I know well how often a speaker will resort to a bunch of platitudes, which often go in one ear and out the other. Or the speaker may drone on about his or her life accomplishments, something that is often boring and, generally, of little relevance to the situation.

Among the many commencement talks I have heard, mostly at Westminster Choir College, one that particularly stayed with me was given by the great preacher and social activist William Sloane Coffin. Coffin was, for many years, the chaplain at Yale University, and then for a long time the minister of Riverside Church in New York. He was among the great clergy of the United States and was also in the thick of all of the fights for social justice in this country. Interestingly, he began his life as a child prodigy on the piano, and as a young man spent some time studying with that great teacher of U.S. composers, Nadia Boulanger, in France.

The title of his address was “Who Tells You Who You Are?” I would add the word “what,” and thus pose the question “Who or what tells you who you are?” As a corollary, I would also like to mention the small novel Damien by the great German writer Hermann Hesse. Damien is a story about the complex and difficult struggle of a young man trying to become who he really is. In his prologue, Hesse writes that “Each man’s life represents a road toward himself, an attempt at such a road, the intimation of a path. No one has ever been entirely and completely himself. Yet each one strives to become that—one in an awkward way, the other in a more intelligent way, each as best he can.” Here, I believe, Hesse speaks to the often difficult journey toward knowing ourselves, a state from which we then can answer the question, “Who tells you who you are?” from within rather than from without.

Some of you may already be asking why I am posing this question to you. You have chosen to commit yourself to the pursuit of performing, creating, or reaching this art that we all love. In so doing, you have already turned your back on forces that lure so many to define who they are—the acquisition of power, position, money, or material goods being among the most seductive. I chose this question because answering it has been at the core of my own journey as an evolving human being and, therefore, as a musician. I also chose it because there are forces in play in today’s world that often make the journey to our essential self very difficult.

I recently came across an article in The Chronicle of Higher Education, which, I believe, speaks directly to one of the reasons that makes the journey within so much more difficult today, and why it is often so much easier to rely upon external forces to tell us who we are. The title of this article by William Deresiewicz was “The End of Solitude”; the subtitle, “As Everyone Seeks More and Broader Connectivity, the Still, Small Voice Speaks Only in Silence.” The following is a quote from this article: “We live exclusively in relation to others, and what disappears from our life is solitude. Technology is taking away our privacy and our concentration. It is also taking away our ability to be alone.” (And, I would add parenthetically, “to go within ourselves.”) Now we are sending text messages on our cell phones, posting pictures on our Facebook pages, and following complete strangers on Twitter. A constant stream of mediated contact, virtual or simulated, keeps us wired into the electronic hive—though contact, or at least two-way contact, seems increasingly beside the point. The goal now, it seems, is simply to become known.

To turn oneself into a sort of miniature celebrity. How many friends do I have on Facebook? How many people are reading my blog? How many Google hits does my name generate? Visibility secures our self-esteem, becoming a substitute, twice-removed, for genuine connection. Not long ago, it was easy to feel lonely. Now, it is impossible to be alone…. [O]ur use of technology seems to involve a constant effort to stave off the possibility of solitude, a continuous attempt, as we sit alone at our computers, to maintain the imaginative presence of others.”
Each of you could immediately respond to this by saying, “But in my many years of study, I have spent countless hours alone in a practice room or working on a composition or researching this or that subject of interest.” I would answer, “Of course.” Yet, there are traps that one can so easily fall into. Our insatiable, identity-hungry egos always stand ready to depend upon external forces to tell us who we are rather than embarking upon the more difficult journey of going deeply within ourselves, and thus becoming self-affirming.

As musicians, it is all too easy, often without our realizing it, for us to be motivated by the external response of the public. By, for example, how beautiful my voice is, what a brilliant virtuoso I am and how inspiring my composition is, or how brilliant my research. For those of us who are conductors, the insidious sense of control and power over others can easily seduce us. Certainly, those of you who will become teachers may have to confront head on a generation whose lives are often ensnared on the surface by the constant need for so-called connectivity.

I am sure that, for the vast majority of you who are graduating today, your love of the art of music and your pursuit of both greater skill and greater understanding of that art have begun to help you work through the insecurities that besiege us all—insecurities that crave the need for external accolade or affirmation to tell us who we are. Please don’t misunderstand me. We all need affirmation from those we love and those we respect. The issue, I believe, is that this is always balanced by one’s self-affirmation, which can only come through making an ever-more-intimate connection to our essential nature, and with who we are as uniquely created human beings. To this end, I believe that periods of silence and solitude are critical.

Also, for those of us whose lives are devoted to an ever-deeper understanding of the composer’s voice, it is difficult, if not impossible, to be in touch with our intuition without finding periods of silence and solitude, and I profoundly believe that the deepest level of musical understanding only emerges intuitively. So much about our technological world can keep us disconnected from that source from which real creativity flows. As musicians, it is all too easy to get caught up in the important but nonetheless surface considerations of the right notes, the right rhythms, the right tempo, historical correctness, or sound for its own sake, so that we don’t listen more deeply to connect with the meaning of a work. Yet, I believe that when one has mastered all of the relevant technical considerations, a musical performance emerges as a re-creation rather than merely a reproduction only if, in the moment, it flows from our intuitive self. Only to the extent that we have gotten in touch with who we are from the inside, rather than from the outside, are we able to begin to trust ourselves enough to listen to our intuition, and thus tap into that aspect of our being from which the creative impulse flows. Only then, I believe, do we become secure enough to take the risks that allow music-making to have the quality of spontaneity that brings it alive.

The idea that music emerges from our intuitive being was, for me, vividly corroborated by a procedure that was described in a book I read some years ago by Princeton University psychologist Julian Jaynes. The name of the book is The Origin of Consciousness in the Breakdown of the Bicameral Mind. Put very simply, Jaynes’s thesis is that as the life of the conscious mind has slowly evolved, we have lost touch with the source that lies beyond the realm of the cognitive or conscious mind. In the book, Jaynes describes a procedure in which the intuitive side of the brain was safely sedated, and the subjects could speak, but could not sing. Conversely, when the cognitive side was sedated, the subjects could sing but could not speak.

Somehow, in this world of ever-present aural and visual clutter, of too much activity, of a public all too ready to respond to the surface of a thing, we need to constantly seek periods of silence and solitude to listen to that still, small voice within, which, to minister to that need, is, for each of us, a sacred calling.

So my hope for you is that in the midst of the overcharged world in which we live, you will find time to be alone, to be still, to become more at one with yourself, and to listen to that still, small voice within, which, I believe, ultimately tells us who we are. As we make that connection, the seductive power of our ego wanes. We become more secure within ourselves, thus more alive and, as musicians, more powerful communicators of our art.

Joseph R. Flummerfelt (D.M.A. ’71) is founder and musical director of New York Choral Artists and Artistic Director Emeritus of Westminster Choir College. Musical America named him 2004 Conductor of the Year; Leonard Bernstein called him “the greatest choral conductor in the world.” Since 1977, he has served as one of three artistic directors for the Spoleto Festival USA in Charleston, and for 23 years he was the maestro del coro for the Festival dei Due Mondi in Spoleto, Italy. His rich and varied career has included collaborations with such eminent conductors as Claudio Abbado, Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Boulez, Lorin Maazel, Kurt Masur, Zubin Mehta, Riccardo Muti, Seiji Ozawa, and Robert Shaw. His choirs have performed with the Berlin, Los Angeles, New York, and Vienna Philharmonic orchestras; Boston, National, New Jersey, and Pittsburgh symphonies; Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra; and the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam.
New Appointments
Dr. Edward Rath, Associate Director, School of Music

Maggie Adams, Visiting Assistant Professor of Musicology, received her B.A. degree in Russian and Soviet area studies from Middlebury College and both the M.M. in musicology and Ph.D. in ethnomusicology from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Adams was previously a visiting lecturer on campus, an editorial assistant for the Slavic Review, and a teaching assistant for the popular undergraduate course, “Introduction to World Music.” She was also assistant director of Balkanalia, the UI Balkan music ensemble. Before coming to UI, she was an administrative assistant at the Open Society Foundations of the Soros Foundation in New York. Adams is the recipient of numerous fellowships and awards for foreign-language study and doctoral research in China and Kazakhstan, and has presented papers at meetings of the Society for Ethnomusicology and the Midwest Slavic Conference, among others. She was also an on-site adviser to the Forde International Music Festival in Norway. She speaks Chinese, French, Kazakh, Russian, and Turkish.

David Allen, Educational Engagement Director, earned the B.S. degree in music education and both the B.M. and M.M. in trombone performance at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he is working on his doctoral degree. In his new post, he guides the curricular and instructional aspects of the School of Music outreach programs and coordinates the student teaching placement and pre-student teaching experiences for all music education students in the School of Music. Allen has continued a family tradition in music education that goes back as far as 1927. Starting in 1996, he was appointed director of bands at Salem Community High School in Salem, Illinois; in 1999, he became director of bands at Centennial High School in Champaign, where he taught for five years. He also taught music to 5th through 8th graders at Champaign’s Dr. Howard Elementary, Franklin Middle, and Jefferson Middle Schools. Allen has been a member of the teaching and administrative faculty of Illinois Summer Youth Music since 1994; has taught the music education courses “Introduction to Music Education” and “Introductory Music Education Technology”; and frequently serves as a clinician and adjudicator. He is an active member of the Illinois Music Educators Association, and co-adviser of the UI chapter of the Illinois Collegiate Music Educators Association.

Art Joslin, Visiting Lecturer in Voice, holds degrees in voice performance from the University of Michigan and Madonna University. He is currently pursuing the D.M.A. in vocal performance and literature, with a secondary emphasis in speech and hearing science at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. He has studied voice with Ara Berberian, Rick Fracker, and Stephen Lussman, and currently studies with tenor Jerold Siena. His vocal coaches have included John Wustman, Jean Schneider, Timothy Cheek, and Julie Jordan Gunn. Joslin has taught vocal and instrumental music at all levels, and his students have won numerous awards and prizes in district, state, and regional vocal auditions and competitions. He returned to Opera at Illinois in November 2010 in the title role of Verdi’s Rigoletto. As a resident artist with the Toledo Opera, he sang Angelotti in Tosca. Other recent performances include Pistola in Falstaff, Paris in Romeo and Juliet, and Don Alfonso in Così fan tutte. He has also performed as baritone soloist in Brahms’s Requiem. Joslin is a 2010 inaugural recipient of the National Association of Teachers of Singing (NATS) Independent Teacher Fellowship. In February 2010, he presented a paper, “Teaching Formant Tuning to the Pre-collegiate Male Singer,” at the annual Indiana University School of Music/NATS Voice Educators Symposium.

Allen Legutki, Visiting Assistant Professor of Music Education, holds B.M.E. and M.M.E. degrees from Illinois State University and a Ph.D. in music education from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. He teaches elementary and secondary instrumental methods courses at the University of Illinois, where he also serves as the editorial assistant for the Bulletin of the Council for Research in Music Education. Legutki’s research interests include music student motivation, teacher and performer identity, and social dynamics within group music activities. He has presented papers on these and other topics at local, state, national, and international music education conferences. Before coming to UI, he taught middle and high school band, jazz ensemble, and music theory for seven years in Sullivan, Illinois, where he also served as director of student activities for Sullivan High School.

Linda Moorhouse, Visiting Associate Professor of Bands, received the B.M.E. degree, with honors, from the University of Florida, an M.M.E. from Louisiana State University, and a D.M.A. in instrumental conducting from the University of Washington. At UI she conducts the University of Illinois Wind Orchestra and teaches courses in instrumental conducting. Prior to her appointment at Illinois, she served for more than 20 years on the faculty at LSU, where she conducted the Symphonic Winds; served as the primary instructor and drill designer for the award-winning Tiger Marching Band; taught instrumental conducting; and ran the summer music camps. At LSU she was a recipient of both the President’s Award and Undergraduate Teaching Award, campus-wide awards for teaching excellence, and the LSU School of Music Excellence in Teaching Award. She has been honored by the Sousa Foundation with the Sudler Order of Merit and was recognized by Phi Beta Mu with the Outstanding Bandmaster Award for Louisiana. A distinguished member laureate of Sigma Alpha Iota, the international fraternity for women in music, she has received the Citation of Excellence from the National Band Association and the Silver Baton and International Golden Rose awards from Women Band Directors International (WBDI). She is also a past-president of WBDI. Moorhouse maintains an active performance schedule, appearing as a guest conductor both nationally and internationally. An elected member of the prestigious American Bandmasters Association, she is a past-president and currently executive secretary-treasurer of the National Band Association (NBA), the world’s largest band organization. She serves as editor of the NBA Journal and is a contributing author for numerous other publications. In September, she was inducted into the University of Florida Bands Hall of Fame.
Bernhard Scully, Visiting Assistant Professor of French Horn, received his undergraduate degree, with honors, at Northwestern University and his master’s degree at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. He undertook further study in Germany and in Norway. Scully has most recently been principal horn and featured soloist of the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra. Prior to that, he was the horn player of the Canadian Brass, with which he performed in 16 countries on three separate continents and recorded four CDs, as well as a top-ranked music video. With this group he performed with such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia Orchestra, Detroit Symphony, Colorado Symphony, Vancouver Symphony, New Jersey Symphony, National Arts Centre Orchestra, and Toronto Symphony. He has been recorded as a soloist for Hal Leonard Publishing’s The G. Schirmer Horn Collection, which includes much of the standard literature for horn and piano. In 2009, he became the first classical brass player to win Minnesota’s prestigious McKnight Foundation Artist Fellowship. He has received awards from the WAMSO Competition, National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts, Evergreen Society of Minnesota, and Schubert Club. He has been on the faculty of the Music Academy of the West; taught at the Eastman School of Music; and given master classes to thousands of students around the world while traveling with the Canadian Brass. He has been part of the Kendall Betts Horn Camp in New Hampshire since its inception in 1995; teaches and performs with the Prairie Winds Woodwind Quintet at the Madeline Island Music Camp in Wisconsin; and is on the faculty of the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute.

Rochelle Sennet, Assistant Professor of Piano, received her bachelor’s degree from the San Francisco Conservatory of Music; M.M. from the University of Michigan; Artist Diploma from Texas Christian University; and D.M.A. from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, all in piano performance. Her programs showcase her versatility at the keyboard, with frequent performances of works by Bach, Beethoven, and such African American composers as H. Leslie Adams, Adolphus Hailstork, and Pulitzer Prize–winner George Walker. While a doctoral student at Illinois, she was chosen to perform John Corigliano’s Etude Fantasy at the School’s Gala Corigliano Concert, with the composer in attendance. She has also served on the piano faculty at the Blue Lake Fine Arts Camp since 2006; made guest appearances at the American Andrea Solya, Clinical Assistant Professor of Composition-Theory and Choral Music, received her B.M. and M.M. degrees in music education and choral conducting from the University of Szeged in Hungary; her M.M. in choral conducting from The Ohio State University; and her D.M.A. in choral conducting and literature at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. She is an active choral conductor and clinician. In addition to her duties at the University of Illinois, she has been director of Chamber Choir and Youth Chorale at the Central Illinois Children’s Chorus since 2006. During her career she has directed The Ohio State University Women’s Glee Club, Columbus Children’s Chorus, University of Illinois Concert Choir, and Illini Women. Her choirs have participated in productions with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, Champaign-Urbana Symphony Orchestra, University of Illinois Symphony Orchestra, and Opera at Illinois. Solya has studied or worked with such conductors as Antal Jancso, István Pávai, Hilary Apfelstadt, and Robert J. Ward; at UI she has studied or worked with Chester Alwes, Fred Stoltzfus, Donald Schleicher, and Eduardo Diazmuñoz. In the summer, she teaches musicianship and conducting in the master’s program of the Kodály Institute at Capital University in Columbus, Ohio. Her research interests include the choral music of Andreas Rauch and the teaching of sight singing for the choral singer. She is a member of the American Choral Directors Association and the Organization of American Kodály Educators.

Bridget Sweet, Assistant Professor of Music Education, received her B.M.E at Western Michigan University, after which time she enjoyed a successful tenure as a middle school choir teacher for nearly 10 years. Her interest in adolescent music education intensified during her master’s and doctoral programs at Michigan State University, which contributed to her current research focus on the characteristics of effective and exemplary music teachers. Prior to coming to Illinois, Sweet was Assistant Professor of Music at Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, where she taught music education courses and coordinated the music student teaching program. She has worked extensively with adolescent singers as a teacher, clinician, and adjudicator. Her research interests include characteristics of exemplary choral music teachers; teacher education; female and male adolescent voice change; and motivation of adolescent singers.

MEDITATIONS
I first met Ronald Romm in 2006 while I was working for a major classical recording label. The Canadian Brass had just released a new album, and I was asked to be the point person at the corporate office of one of the label’s more important accounts. The Brass’s mission that day: to perform for the entire staff of this company in an informal lunch/concert gathering. It was a great PR and schmoozing opportunity for the Brass, as well as the record company.

I was early and waited outside the building for the band to show up on what had turned out to be a chilly morning. I tried to keep warm by hopping from one leg to the other as I watched my breath leave my body in small puffs of smoke. Finally a black sedan showed up, the back door opened, and out popped Ronald Romm, with a twinkle in his eye and a happy greeting for me. I extended my hand; Ron grabbed it and pulled me into a bear hug as if we were old pals who hadn’t seen each other in years. I immediately liked him.
The performance went extremely well. Though I had heard the Canadian Brass play many times live and also on record, I was particularly touched by Romm’s playing that day: it was almost like speech. Could he actually be playing so well that I understood his meaning beyond merely the tune and rhythm? I think so. Since then I have become more than a fan of this virtuoso trumpet player, I have also gotten to know him personally.

Romm comes from a musical family. His mother was a classically trained clarinetist, who also took up the saxophone in the family dance band, The Romm-Antics, in order to spend more time with her husband, a drummer. Both were enthusiastic lovers of music, and they instilled this love and passion in their son. Romm says listening to music on the radio and to phonograph records became a big part of their daily lives.

When he was around nine years old, Romm was introduced, almost accidentally, to the trumpet. He had come home from school for lunch as usual, but on this day he heard “fantastic sounds coming out of the radio.” “Who is that?” he wondered aloud. His mom said, “Why, that’s Louis Armstrong, playing trumpet.” He says his reply was quick: “That’s what I want to do!”

Eager to start, he was given his first trumpet and took his first lessons with his mother—from whom, he likes to say, he learned to play “with a soft clarinet sound.” Besides Armstrong, he also got an earful of Harry James, another reigning trumpet king of the day. Along with popular music, he sought out and heard great playing from the best principal trumpeters of America’s major orchestras at the time, including Adolph “Bud” Herseth in Chicago, Samuel Kraus in Philadelphia, and William Vacchiano in New York. Vacchiano eventually became Romm’s teacher when he attended The Juilliard School years later.

Opera was also a big influence—the singing styles of Maria Callas and her great stage partner Giuseppe Di Stefano, as well as the lyrical technique of Enrico Caruso and Luciano Pavarotti, became part of his music education.

Growing up in Los Angeles, Romm had access to a cross-section of music styles. Along with jazz, big band, opera, and orchestral music, there were klezmer, folk, and chamber music. One of his earliest teachers was Lester Remsen, who played trumpet with the U.S. Marine Band and eventually became principal trumpet of the Los Angeles Philharmonic. It was lucky he met Remsen, as Remsen was a pioneer in the development of brass chamber music. Very little was available at that time. After Remsen became well established at the University of Southern California, he and his colleagues not only arranged music for brass but also recovered neglected scores from decades earlier. He formed a quintet called the Los Angeles Brass Ensemble. When he felt Romm was ready, Remsen invited his young protégé to sit in and, eventually, join the group. This ensemble, as well as a brass quintet made up of members of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, became Romm’s training ground.

When he went to New York to study at Juilliard in 1967, the brass quintet was still a largely unheard-of musical combination. Enthusiastic about forming his own group, Romm found other interested players and started the New York Brass Society, a quintet that rehearsed four times a week—usually late into the night, given the members’ busy day schedules. When the opportunity came to join the Canadian Brass, he had the training and expertise not only to fit right in but also to help take the group into a new era of brass playing.

The Canadian Brass sprang from modest, experimental roots in Toronto, from an idea developed by founders Eugene Watts and Chuck Daellenbach in 1970. Along with engaging stage presence, their serious and meticulous attention to detail helped define them as one of the great chamber ensembles of their time. The members’ imagination and consummate musicianship eventually elevated the art of the brass quintet to what it is today. The Canadian Brass became one of the first quintets to bring exceptional and virtuosic brass chamber music settings to worldwide audiences, a major change for an entire family of instruments.

Romm has played professionally for more than 50 years, performing around the world—in Japan, China, Australia, and most of Europe, includ-
Ronald Romm is Professor of Trumpet and Brass Studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. B. Suzanne Hassler, Editor-in-Chief, sonorities

Chester Alwes (choral and music education) published his book Handel's Messiah—The Complete Solo Variants (Roger Dean Music, 2009); this is the only book to bring together all of the various versions of the solos from Messiah. Alwes made a presentation on the book at the 51st National Association of Teachers of Singing convention in Salt Lake City in July 2010. His book A History of Western Choral Music is in final production at Oxford University Press.

Christina Bashford (musicology) held fellowships in spring 2010 at the UI Center for Advanced Study and the Institute of Musical Research, University of London, which enabled her to begin a new research project, “Violin Culture in Britain and Beyond.” During that time, she produced an article on the history of The Strad for the magazine’s 120th anniversary issue. She also gave papers at the conferences of the North American British Music Studies and Midwest Victorian Studies associations. In summer 2010, her article “Historiography and Invisible Musics: Domestic Chamber Music in Nineteenth-Century Britain” was published in the Journal of the American Musicological Society.

James Beauchamp (emeritus, composition-theory) traveled in September 2010 to the Second Vienna Talk on Music Acoustics conference, hosted by the University of Music and Performing Arts in Vienna, Austria, on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the Institute of Musical Acoustics (Wiener Klangstil). There he gave a keynote presentation, “Perceptually Correlated Parameters of Musical Instrument Sounds,” and an invited talk, “In Search for a Source/Filter Model for Brass Instruments.” In November, he attended the fall 2010 meeting of the Acoustical Society of America, held in Cancún, where he organized and chaired a double session on “Analysis, Synthesis, and Perception of Musical Sounds.”

Louis Bergonzi (music education) and his undergraduate string students gave a master class for the Cooper Middle School Orchestra of Buffalo Grove, Illinois. He served as a consultant and site-evaluator for American String Teachers Association and National Association of Music Merchants for a project that expands access to stringed-instrument study for underserved populations. He provided in-service workshops for string and orchestra teachers from school districts of Blue Springs, Missouri, and Kansas City and Shawnee Mission, Kansas. During 2010–2011, Bergonzi is conducting all-state orchestras in South Carolina, Missouri, and Minnesota. His article “Sexual Orientation and Music Education: Continuing a Tradition” appeared in the December 2009 issue of Music Educators Journal. In the publication, Bergonzi raised questions about conventional music education and examined the ways in which it biases curricular content and marginalizes the lives and work of LGBT music teachers, students, and their families. (See also Campus News elsewhere in this issue.) Bergonzi’s article “Sexual Orientation and Music Education: Continuing a Tradition” was cited by Music Educators Journal as the most-downloaded article of 2009—despite being available for only one month of that year.

Zack Browning (composition-theory) gave lecture-performances in China, South Korea, and Taiwan and served as composer-in-residence at Nanjing Normal University and Seoul National University. Browning also presented lectures and performances in Tampa, Orlando, and Houston. Premieres during the 2009–2010 academic year included Soul United in Taipei; Silk Dynasty in Nanjing, China; and Moon Thrust by the Cadillac Moon Ensemble in New York City; and Browning’s String Quartet by the JACK Quartet at Northwestern University. The JACK Quartet performance of the String Quartet at Merkin Hall received a favorable review in The New York Times. Innova Recordings released his CD Venus Notorious in August 2010.

“Zack Browning’s 2008 String Quartet provided just what was needed to end the program: a propulsive, giddy, rocking piece, a rush of cyclic riffs and fractured meters. Was it just the context the JACK Quartet provided, or did the strange, chorale-like harmonies in the piece recall Machaut?”

Donna Buchanan (musicology) has been awarded a 2010–2011 Fulbright-Hays Faculty Research Abroad grant to conduct ethnomusicological fieldwork on music, cosmology, and post-socialism in Bulgaria. In November 2009, she read a paper at the Society for Ethnomusicology meeting in Mexico City and, in January 2010, presented a colloquium at the University of Pittsburgh and conducted a workshop with its Carpathian Music Ensemble. She organized and presented new research at an international conference on “Soundscape of the Spirit: Cosmology and Sound Art from the Black to the Aral Seas” for the University’s Russian, East European and Eurasian Center, in April 2010. Buchanan also directed and performed concerts with the Balkanalia ensemble in Chicago, Urbana-Champaign, and Waterloo, Iowa. She is the incoming book review editor for the journal Ethnomusicology.

Michael Cameron (double bass) was a guest artist at the new music festival “June in Buffalo,” working with such distinguished composers and artists as Steve Reich, Roger Reynolds, and Irvine Arditti. His essay “A Second Decade of a Silk Road” was published in the Ravinia Festival summer guide in celebration of an appearance by Yo Yo Ma and the Silk Road Ensemble at that festival. He was also the featured soloist in the world premiere of Maurice Saylor’s score for the silent film Fiddleston, performing with the Snark Ensemble at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.

Elliot Chasanov (trombone) was the featured trombone artist at the First Metropolis Brass Master Class held in July 2010 in Bornem, Belgium, where he also performed as a member of the Illinois Brass Quintet. The IBQ concert included nine of Chasanov’s transcriptions and arrangements for brass quintet. The sponsor, Metropolis Music Publishers, a Belgian firm that has been in business since 1939, is establishing the Elliot Chasanov Signature Series, which will feature published versions of his arrangements and transcriptions for solo brass, trombone choir, brass ensemble, and wind band. In September 2010, his brass-choir arrangements of Mussorgsky’s Night on Bald Mountain and Rossini’s overture to L’Italiana in Algeri were performed at the Penta Brass Festival in Quincinetto, Italy.

Richard Colwell (emeritus, music education) was awarded the National Federation of Music Clubs’ highest honor for lifetime contributions to music, together with Metropolitan Opera bass-baritone Simón Estes. The federation is the nation’s largest music organization, with 180,000 members. In January 2010, Pearson Publishing Company issued the fourth edition of Colwell’s Teaching of Instrumental Music; this edition is co-authored with Michael Hewitt. Colwell, with the assistance of David Woods, dean of the School of Fine Arts at the University of Connecticut, wrote the education section in the forthcoming second edition of the New Grove Dictionary of American Music. He is the co-editor, with Peter Webster, of Oxford University Press’s two-volume handbook on the teaching and learning of music. In spring 2010, he wrote the lead chapters in two edited books: one on assessment, published by GIA, and one on teaching and learning, with Martin Fautley, published by Oxford University Press.

Ollie Watts Davis (voice) served on the committee to assist in the selection of the president of the University of Illinois and chaired the University Senate’s honorary doctorate committee. She appeared as soprano soloist in Mozart’s Mass in C minor with the Springfield Symphony (Massachusetts), in Bach’s Cantata 61 at the Allerton Music Barn Festival, and in Beethoven’s Symphony No. 9 with the Elgin Symphony (Illinois). She participated in a PechaKucha presentation (20 images for 20 seconds each) for the UI Board of Trustees on the legacy of the Black Chorus, and, under her direction, the Black Chorus hosted the Chicago Children’s Choir and performed for the CIC Academic Leadership Conference.

Eduardo Díazmuñoz (opera/New Music Ensemble) composed, conducted, and recorded the music for Miguel Rico’s Mexican feature film, Espiritu de triunfo (Spirit of Triumph), which is based on true stories. It premiered in November and is expected to be distributed internationally. This past summer, he returned to conduct the Caracas Municipal Orchestra, after an absence of 10 years; he was its principal guest conductor from 1988 through 2000. In September, he conducted a special concert in San Bernardino, California by Sinfonia Mexicana and the San Bernardino Symphony Orchestra, which was a triple celebration: the bicentennial of Mexico’s independence, the centennial of the Mexican Revolution, and Sinfonia Mexicana’s 25th anniversary. He was principal guest conductor and artistic and music adviser for Sinfonia Mexicana from 1991 through 1995. (See also Campus News elsewhere in this issue.)

Larry Gray (jazz bass) is in the middle of a busy year following up on his CD, 1, 2, 3..., and performing with the Ramsey Lewis Trio and with his own group, The Larry Gray Trio. His many concerts this fall with Lewis included appearances at the Blue Note in Tokyo and the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. Gray’s recently rebuilt website, larrygraymusic.com, provides information on his own CDs as well as audio samples of other projects.

Peter J. Griffin (bands) has been active as a clinician for numerous concert bands in Illinois and also served as a clinician for the University of Evansville Wind Ensemble in Indiana. He guest-conducted the University of Kentucky Symphony Band and the Brewster Town Band in Brewster, Massachusetts. He served as an adjudicator at the Midwest Music Festival in Lemont, Illinois; at Festivals of Music in Palatine, Illinois; and at the Virginia Band and Orchestra Association District IV Concert Band Festival.

John Dee (oboe), the Bill A. Nugent Professor of Performance Studies, returned with the UI woodwind faculty to perform and teach at the Korean National University of the Arts in Seoul, in May 2010. For ISYM’s fourth annual Double-Reed Week, which brought young oboe and bassoon students from across the country to the University of Illinois, he taught master classes and reed-making skills and led one of the largest double-reed ensembles in the country. Dee performed Mozart’s Oboe Concerto as guest soloist with the UI Wind Symphony in its season-opening concert at Krannert Center; was featured at the Allerton Barn Music Festival in September; and performed in Chicago as principal oboe of the Ars Viva Orchestra in October 2010. He will record a CD of works written especially for him by Elaine Fine for Centaur Records later this year.
Faculty News

Griffin continues to serve as conductor of the Concert Band of Central Illinois and has been chosen to present a clinic at the 2011 Illinois Music Educators Association All-State Convention in Peoria.

Joyce Griggs (assistant director) received the Grainger Medallion for her contribution to editing and making available for publication a series of Percy Grainger works for saxophone ensemble. The International Percy Grainger Society presented the award in July 2010 at the 63rd Convention of the Texas Bandmasters Association. The collection, published through RBC Music Company, marks a significant addition to the list of current publications of Grainger’s music. In addition, she has been invited to co-present at the annual conference for the National Association of Schools of Music. The presentation will address the challenges posed for music students who transfer from one institution to another.

Dana Hall (jazz and musicology) was recognized in December 2009 by the Chicago Tribune as a Chicagoan of the Year for his outstanding achievements in the arts. Those achievements included the release of his debut recording, Into the Light, on Origins Records, which appeared on more than a dozen Best of 2009 lists; appearances with his quintet at the Chicago Jazz Festival and his quartet at the Hyde Park Jazz Festival; concerts and master classes across the United States, Asia, and Europe; serving as a guest conductor for the Ohio and Rhode Island All-State Jazz Ensembles; and feature stories on NPR’s Fresh Air and in Downbeat magazine. He continues to serve as music director of the Chicago Jazz Ensemble and has concert engagements in Kiev, New York City, and Washington, D.C., where he’ll ring in the New Year with John Faddis at the Kennedy Center.

B. Suzanne Hassler (editor) received a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship to attend the NEA Journalism Institute in Classical Music and Opera at Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism in October 2010.

The institute, co-directed by András Szántó and Anya Grundmann, included study with noted artistic director and author Joseph Horowitz. In addition to daily sessions taught by Columbia University faculty and invited experts, the institute included performances by Joshua Bell, Jeremy Denk, René Pape, Mariinsky Theater Orchestra, Metropolitan Opera, the New Juilliard Ensemble, and the New York Philharmonic.

Dennis Helmrich (piano accompanying) was in residence last summer at the Tanglewood Music Center, where he coached song literature and contemporary music; taught master classes; supervised a song program celebrating the 200th anniversary of Robert Schumann’s birth; and prepared an ensemble to perform some of Beethoven’s folk-song settings for the Mark Morris Dance Company’s program. He also attended the Yachats Music Festival on the Oregon coast, where he participated in four concerts. During 2010-2011 season, he will devise superbilities for Opera at Illinois productions of Verdi’s Rigoletto and Cavalli’s La Calista. Helmrich was promoted to the rank of full professor this year and also received a discretionary research fund from the vice president for academic affairs in recognition of his scholarly and musical activities; he was one of four scholars so recognized in this year’s promotion and tenure process.

Karin Hendricks (music education) presented workshops at a number of conferences during the 2009–2010 school year, including the International Research Symposium on Talent Education in Minneapolis; American String Teachers Conference in Santa Clara, California; Music Educators National Conference in Anaheim, California; and Suzuki Association of the Americas in Minneapolis. Additionally, she gave invited lectures at the University of Michigan and presented student-leadership workshops in local public schools. She had articles published in the International Journal of Music Education: Research; Bulletin of the Council for Research in Music Education; and American String Teacher.

Jonathan Keeble (flute) released a pair of recordings on the Albany Record label. Voyage, in collaboration with University of Illinois harpist Ann Yeung, features works by American composers. With The Prairie Winds, he released Turbulent Winds, a recording of works by Eastern European composers. In addition to concerts in South Korea and throughout the United States, Keeble taught at Aria International and the Madeline Island Music Camp. He began a two-year term as chair of the National Flute Association in November 2010.

Herbert Kellman (emeritus, musicology) has been awarded an American Musicological Society Publication Award in support of the monograph and modern edition Biblioteca Vaticana, Manuscript Chigi C VIII 234: A Monument of Late Burgundian Music and Art, undertaken with co-author Edward Houghton. It will be published by the University of Chicago Press in the series Monuments of Renaissance Music. Compiled in 1498–1503, this lavishly illustrated choir book comprises works by Ockeghem, Regis, La Rue, and Josquin, among other composers, and is perhaps the best known of all the manuscripts produced in the scribal workshops of the Burgundian-Habsburg court. This summer Kellman hosted scholars from Baylor University and the University of Jaén (Spain) in the Renaissance Music Archives.
William Kinderman (musicology) spent 2009–2010 in Munich, Germany, where he was the Deutscher Akademischer Austausch Dienst Guest Professor in the Institute of Musicology at the University of Munich, teaching a full load of courses on Schubert, Wagner, Beethoven’s late style, and Thomas Mann and music. In March 2010, Kinderman received a research prize for lifetime achievement from the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation. In September 2010, Kinderman presented a lecture recital of Beethoven’s Diabelli Variations as a keynote event at the symposium “Unexpected Variations” at the Orpheus Institute in Ghent, Belgium. In November, a two-volume facsimile edition of the autograph score of the Diabelli Variations appeared through the Beethoven-Haus at Bonn; it contains Kinderman’s commentary about the genesis of the variations. He is currently finishing a book, The Creative Process in Music: Essays in Genetic Criticism from Mozart to Kurtág, which will be published by the University of Illinois Press next year.

Dmitri Kouzov (cello) had solo concerto engagements this year in South Africa with the Cape Town Philharmonic, Johannesburg Philharmonic, and Kwazulu Natal Philharmonic (Durban); St. Petersburg Symphony (Russia), Minnesota Sinfonia, and Rockford Symphony; recitals in the Chicago Mostly Music series and Kravis Center for the Performing Arts in Florida; 30 performances with the Manhattan Piano Trio; and concerto recordings with the Sinfonia Varsovia Symphony Orchestra (Poland) and St. Petersburg Symphony Orchestra (Russia). In September, he released a CD with the Manhattan Piano Trio on Marquis Classics. His recording of the complete Schumann Piano Trios, with Peter Laul (piano) and Ilya Gringolts (violin), on Onyx Classics will be out in 2011.

Erik Lund (composition-theory) had a CD of his music released on the Centaur record label. Included on this recording are ensemble works performed by the acclaimed Arditti String Quartet (England), the Crash Ensemble (Ireland), and the C2 Duo (U.S.). Solo works were performed by Michael Cameron, professor of double bass; percussionist Steve Butters (M.M. ’91); and pianist David Psenicka (M.M. ’00, D.M.A. ’07). Lund was also commissioned by Debra Richtmeyer, professor of saxophone, to compose a new work, entitled fo-ci, for the UI Saxophone Ensemble. The piece was included on the CD World Without Words and premiered at the 2010 North American Saxophone Alliance Biennial Conference at the University of Georgia (Athens).

Sherban Lupu (violin) traveled to China to present master classes and recitals at the Beijing Central Conservatory and Nanjing Normal University, after completing his Fulbright Scholar’s assignment in Romania. He was also an artist-in-residence at the Würzburg Academy of Music in Germany. In July, he recorded a new CD with the Cluj Folklore Institute and, in August, performed at and directed the Brasov International Festival in Romania. In November 2010, Lupu released the first in a series of six CDs that he is recording of the complete violin works by H.W. Ernst on the Toccata Classics label in London.

Kazimierz Machala (emeritus, horn) was appointed visiting professor of horn at the Chopin University of Music in Warsaw, Poland. He adjudicated the 2010 National Chamber Music Competition for Woodwinds and Brass in Warsaw and presented a master class at the Conservatorio della Svizzera Italiana in Lugano, Switzerland. In July, he performed his own work, Concerto for Horn, Winds and Percussion, at the 2010 Texas Bandmasters Association Convention in San Antonio. Last May, the horn section of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra performed his Elegy for Five Horns in the Chamber Music at the Art Institute of Chicago concert series.

Jeffrey Magee (musicology) interviewed Doris Eaton Travis for his forthcoming book on Irving Berlin and musical theater for Oxford University Press. The 105-year-old former Ziegfeld Follies dancer remembered lyrics that Berlin wrote for the 1919 Follies that had long been believed lost. The interview formed the basis of an invited paper given at Washington University in spring 2010 and at the meeting of the American Musicological Society in November 2010. Mrs. Travis died on May 11 (Irving Berlin’s birthday) at the age of 106.

Charlotte Mattax Moersch (harpischord) celebrates the release of her CD recording of the harpsichord suites of 18th-century composer Pierre Février on Centaur Records. Other recordings for this season include Bach’s St. John Passion with the Bach Choir and Festival Orchestra of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, with whom she performs regularly. She will be a featured guest artist at the Los Angeles Harpsichord Center in March 2011 and, in May 2011, will make a guest appearance as soloist on antique instruments at the Dumont Concert Series in Wilmington, Delaware. In June 2011, she will perform a solo

Chip McNeill (jazz) toured South America with Arturo Sandoval for three weeks, performing and teaching in Argentina, Brazil, and Chile. He also performed with Sandoval in Chicago, Minneapolis, Montréal, San Diego, and Washington, D.C. He performed with the Steve Allee big band in Indianapolis at the Jazz Kitchen and Indianapolis Jazz Festival, as well as at the Indiana University Jacobs School of Music in Bloomington. In addition to hosting the Four Others jazz saxophone group, he gave clinics and performances at the University of Chicago Department of Performing Arts; with the Jim Widner Big Band at the University of Nebraska; and with his own quartet at Ball State University. He also presented a four-day artist-in-residence performance clinic at the University of Central Florida, where he was the featured performer with their big band and faculty quartet in addition to presenting a clinic on jazz improvisation.

William Moersch (percussion) was a featured artist at the Marimba 2010 International Festival and Conference in Minneapolis-St. Paul in April, performing chamber works by Teruyuki Noda and Alejandro Viñao, and premiering Libby Larsen’s "Like Blind Men Tapping in the Dark." He was also a returning faculty artist for the Second Patagonia International Marimba Festival in Argentina in October and the Percussive Arts Society International Convention in November. His recent commissions include works by composers Martin Bresnick, Halim El-Dabh, John Serry, and Charles Wuorinen. Upcoming appearances include solo engagements with Sinfonia da Camera in Boris Papandopulo’s "Concerto for Xylophone and Strings" in February 2011.

Tracy Parish (coordinator, outreach) was awarded a College of Fine and Applied Arts Creative Research Award to fund a recording of early chromatic trumpet music on the Mark Records label. In July 2010, he appeared as a soloist and chamber musician and presented a research paper, “Implications of Topic in the Development of a Performance Interpretation of the Trumpet Concerto by Joseph Haydn,” at the 35th Annual Conference of the International Trumpet Guild in Sydney, Australia. Parish also presented a series of concerts in Silverton, Colorado, as a member of the Great Western Rocky Mountain Festival Brass Band, and recorded brass-band pieces from the Civil War era with the Vintage Brass Band of Springfield, Illinois.

The Pacifica Quartet comprised of Simin Ganatra (violin), Sibbi Bernhardsson (violin), Masumi Per Rostad (viola), and Brandon Vamos (cello) completed its first season as quartet-in-residence at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. In October 2010, the Quartet was recognized by 40north.org and the Champaign County Arts, Culture, and Entertainment Council with a 2010 Spotlight ACE Award for its “virtuosity, exuberant performance style, and daring repertory choices.” During the 2010-2011 season, the Quartet will perform the complete string quartets of Dmitri Shostakovich in Chicago, New York, and Urbana. Visit www.pacificaquartet.com for a detailed schedule of performance dates and locations.

Abel Saldívar Ramirez (bands) completed a two-year residency as the principal guest conductor for the Texas A & M University-Kingsville summer music camp. He also served as an adjudicator for the Texas State Honor Band Competition during the Texas Bandmasters Association Conference in July 2010. The National Band Association Journal accepted his research on the art of paso doble performance for publication in its 2010 Fall/Winter issue, and RBC Music and Publishing Co. published his adaptation of the Concerto for Tuba by Kenneth Applegate. In February 2011, Ramirez will appear as a guest conductor with the Texas All-State Band.

Debra Richtmeyer (saxophone) has been selected to be one of five judges for the Third Jean-Marie Londeix International Saxophone Competition to be held in Bangkok, Thailand, July 4–16, 2011. She is the only American judge selected for the panel. Richtmeyer recorded Lee Acton’s new Concerto for Alto Saxophone and Orchestra with the Slovak Radio Orchestra in September 2010 for a CD of Acton’s compositions to be released by Albany records. Her CD World Without Words was selected for the 2011 Grammy Entry List for Best Classical Album and for Best Chamber Music Performance. (See also Campus News.)
Dana Robinson (organ) played the opening recital, with colleague Christa Rakich, at an international conference held by the Westfield Center for Early Keyboard Studies in April 2010 in Eugene, Oregon. The conference was devoted to the organ building of HendrikNiehoff and in honor of the work of living organ builder John Brombaugh. This past summer, he performed at the Heilig-Kreuz Kirche in Berlin, the Methuen Memorial Music Hall in Massachusetts, and the Gethsemane Lutheran Church in Seattle; taught at the American Guild of Organists–Pipe Organ Encounter at the Indiana University, Jacobs School of Music; and judged the semifinal round of the American Guild of Organists National Young Artists Competition. He serves as national councilor for organizational concerns for the Organ Historical Society and is on the board of directors of the Westfield Center for Early Keyboard Studies.

Gabriel Solis (musicology) was a scholar-in-residence this summer at the University of Goroka, in the Eastern Highlands province of Papua New Guinea. He conducted workshops with students, collaborated with local faculty on research, and gave a presentation, “Beyond Preservation: Creativity and Contemporary Indigenous Music.” His article “I Did It My Way: Rock and the Logic of Covers” appeared in the July 2010 issue of Popular Music and Society.

Bridget Sweet (music education) presented the session “Starting the Conversation in Music Teacher Education Programs” at the symposium “Establishing Identity: LGBT Studies and Music Education,” which was held on campus in May 2010. (See also New Appointments elsewhere in this issue.)

Stephen Taylor (composition) had four CDs of his music released this year, including his first solo CD, The Machine Awakes (Albany Records). Three new mini- operas that he composed were performed by Tapestry New Opera in Toronto in September 2010. He also collaborated with rock singer Storm Large on orchestral arrangements for the Oregon Symphony and presented research on Bjork and Radiohead at the Society for Music Theory in Montréal and at the Bellairs Institute Workshop on Musical Rhythm in Barbados.

“... terse, pointillistic, abstract, precise... pretty and anything but shallow... With his refined and imaginative sound world, Stephen Andrew Taylor is a composer worth hearing.”
—Raymond Tuttle (Fanfare magazine, July/August 2010)

Matthew Thibeault (music education) continues his research on music video games (with Guy Garnett) with a $10,000 Creative Research Award. He published “General Music as a Cure for the High-Stakes Concert” in the April issue of General Music Today, where he writes the Secondary Scene column. Thibeault joined the editorial board of the Journal of Music, Technology, and Education and became co-managing editor for the International Journal of Education and the Arts. He gave invited presentations and served as a discussant in Beijing for the International Society for Music Education. In Illinois, Thibeault spoke to the Illinois Elementary School Association and Illinois Music Educators Association.

Nicholas Temperley (emeritus, musicology) is the joint editor, with Stephen Banfield of Bristol University, of Music and the Wesleys, which covers the influence of music on the Methodist movement founded by John and Charles Wesley and the musical achievements of Charles’s sons, Charles and Samuel, and grand- son Samuel Sebastian, all of whom were prominent composers. Temperley contributed the book’s introduction and chapters on John Wesley’s attitude toward music and on the anthems of Samuel Sebastian Wesley, whose bicentennial is in 2010. The book will be published by University of Illinois Press.

Reynold Tharp (composition) enjoyed two premieres this year: San Francisco Night received its New York premiere in July by the New Juilliard Ensemble, conducted by Joel Sachs at the Museum of Modern Art. His song cycle Anima Liberata, commissioned for the Allerton Music Festival, was premiered in September by Yvonne Gonzales Redman, Julie Gunn, and Dmitry Kouzov. He is currently writing a flute and harp duet for Jonathan Keeble and Ann Yeung, and a large ensemble piece for the New Juilliard Ensemble. (See also Campus News.)

For the 100th Anniversary of Illinois Homecoming, Professor Emeritus Gary Smith (left) designed a halftime show for the combined forces of the Marching Illini and the Alumni Band, and Director of Bands Robert Rumbelow commemorated the centennial by composing Illinois Fanfare, premiered by the 750-member band on October 23, 2010.

Music as Social Life

Thomas Turino, in his more than two decades as a teacher and scholar of ethnomusicology at the U of I, has published important studies of music of the Aymara people of Peru, the popular musicians of Zimbabwe, the uses of semiotics in interpreting musical life, music in diaspora communities, and concepts such as nationalism, globalization, and cosmopolitanism as they help us to understand musical events, particularly in the late twentieth century. Music as Social Life puts together his varied experiences concisely, in a format that is readily accessible to students and laypersons, bringing them all to bear on an issue raised at the beginning: “Why Music Matters.” From here he proceeds to explore ways in which music is socially meaningful and powerful in a variety of situations.

The emphasis throughout is on the uses of music as people interact, individually and as groups and nations. Some sections and ideas that struck me as particularly interesting: The first chapter, providing conceptual tools for comprehending the rest, presents the system of semiotics developed by C.S. Peirce, with excellent explanations of types of signs: icon, index, symbol. Contemplating the world of music, Turino lays aside older categories such as “art,” “folk,” and “popular” music, and presents a system applying to musical experience in all twentieth-century cultures—presentational, participatory, and two kinds of recording (hi-fi and “studio audio art”), the latter indicating his understanding of the enormous role that recorded music plays in our lives. A chapter on “Old-Time Music and Dance” tells a lot about musical life in Champaign-Urbana and Turino’s own experience as a performer. And a section on music and politics provides detailed analyses of the way music was used by the Nazis in the 1930s, and by the American Civil Rights movement.

Turino touches on many issues and many cultures, illustrating superbly the kinds of thinking in which ethnomusicologists engage. Though not organized as a typical textbook, it is excellent reading for students, particularly as it subsumes Western and non-Western musical cultures under one umbrella. Is there an outstanding message? To me, it is that to understand the power of music, we must look not only to composer and performer in presentations such as concerts, but more, as the subtitle suggests, to the ways people participate: singing, playing, dancing, reacting, interacting.

A New Beethoven Sonata Cycle

“Why another cycle of Beethoven’s great thirty-two Piano Sonatas?” asks Timothy Ehlen in his introduction to this new CD set (for which he also provides informative and perceptive liner notes). His own answer to the question, echoing that of others from down the years, is that there is no single, definitive interpretation of these works, so all performers bring something of their own to them. In theory, then, there is room for any number of performances. Ehlen goes on to illustrate his point brilliantly by his own playing on these CDs. There are many high points, but for this reviewer it is Ehlen’s sense of the dramatic that comes through first and foremost, allied with an admirable talent for sustained concentration when performing some of Beethoven’s more extended musings (the “Hammerklavier” being a case in point here). Each of the two CDs presents sonatas from Beethoven’s three compositional periods. Volume one has Op. 2, No. 1 in F Minor; the famous “Moonlight” Sonata Op. 27, No. 2; and the massive “Hammerklavier” in B-flat, Op. 106. Volume two features Op. 2, No. 2 in A Major; the so-called “Tempest” Sonata Op. 31, No. 2; the short and intriguing Op. 78 in F-sharp Major; and the E Major Sonata Op. 109. Presenting the piano sonatas in this way, rather than simply chronologically by date of composition, is rewarding for the listener, and provides insights that a strict chronological presentation could not.

The F Minor Sonata Op. 2, No. 1, spans a great emotional range, and while the two central movements—an adagio and a minuet and trio—may look emotionally more simple, they repay deep thought, since, rather like an iceberg, their main substance lies below the immediate surface. As for the “Moonlight” sonata, anyone who has played or listened to it will know that its first movement requires the player to establish a dreamy, timeless world, and then to return to reality in its finale. The difficulty here is not to return to earth with a bump, but somehow to tie the two movements together in a unified whole, as Beethoven presumably intended. Ehlen answers these and the demands of all six sonatas with both aplomb and panache, balancing thoughtful interpretation, technical assurance, and, when required, a sense of excitement and drama. He is thoughtful in his interpretative choices, and thus manages to perform each work very convincingly.

There is no timetable for completion of the set: at the current rate, it will require around eight years. I look forward to announcing further issues in this column. In the meantime, these first two volumes will whet the appetite of Beethoven enthusiasts for more.

Timothy Ehlen is Associate Professor of Piano at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and an International Steinway Artist. In addition to his recordings of Beethoven’s piano works, he has also recorded Robert Schumann’s Fantasie in C Major, Op. 17, and Lucia’s transcription of Beethoven’s An die ferne Geliebte for Azica records.

A Very Agile Elephant

You don’t have to know Bruno Nettl for long before you learn about the importance of elephants in his life. He has been collecting representations of them since the mid-1980s, and also chose to honor the elephant in the name of his own publishing imprint, “Elephant and Cat Press.” Elephants, of course, are renowned for their long memories, and those who know Bruno will also be aware that he is, in a very real sense, the “institutional memory” of the UI School of Music: some of his reminiscences have appeared in previous issues of sonorities, and his far-sighted perspective often enables him to come up with a convincing explanation for some of the School’s more arcane customs and practices.

This book, too, is about memory. It reproduces several essays and papers Nettl has written over the years, subdivided under four headings: “Central Issues in a Grand History,” “In the Academy,” “Celebrating Our Principal Organizations” (these being the International Council for Traditional Music, International Folk Music Council, and Society for Ethnomusicology), and “A Collage of Commentary.” The latest contributions date from 2009. This is no random anthology, however: there is a fascinating historical narrative here from a sharp-minded and mentally nimble scholar, who also generously provides over twenty pages of bibliographical references for those wishing to discover more about the field of ethnomusicology. A few chapter headings will serve to give further information about the book’s contents: “Ethno among the Ologies”; “Look at It Another Way: Alternative Views of the History”; “Revisiting Comparison, Comparative Study, and Comparative MusicoLOGY” (“comparative musicology,” or Vergleichende Musikwissenschaft, being the early name for what we have subsequently come to call ethnomusicology); and “Music—What’s That?” Each of the essays is characterized by Nettl’s ability to present often quite detailed information in an informal and accessible way, all packaged inside an attractive book that will make a great gift for a music enthusiast or specialist. In spite of its title, no guarantees can be made—unfortunately—about its ability to aid the purchaser in remembering anniversaries.

Nettl’s Elephant: On the History of Ethnomusicology

Bruno Nettl (with foreword by Anthony Seeger)
University of Illinois Press
www.press.uillinois.edu

Bruno Nettl, an emeritus professor of music and anthropology at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, is the author of The Study of Ethnomusicology: Thirty-one Issues and Concepts and other works. An internationally renowned musicologist, he is both a founder and past president of the Society for Ethnomusicology.
Hillary Anderson was the first place winner of the Nicholas Raimondi Vocal Scholarship in the 2010 Casa Italia Vocal Competition in Chicago. She recently sang Lady Billows in Albert Herring and the Countess in Le Nozze di Figaro for Opera at Illinois. In the summer of 2009, she was a member of La Scuola Italia, a summer opera program for young singers in Urbania, Italy. Hillary is a graduate student in the voice studio of Professor Sylvia Stone.

Insung Baik was a semi-finalist for the National Flute Association’s 2010 Young Artist Competition. Insung, a D.M.A. candidate, is a student of Professor Jonathan Keeble.

Natalie Ckuj, a junior soprano and student of Professor Ollie Watts Davis, received second place in the National Association of Teachers of Singing (NATS) competition of Central Illinois. Natalie also participated in the 2010 V.O.I.C. Experience program in Palm Harbor, Florida.

Melissa Davis appeared as the mezzo soprano soloist for a Summer in the Parks concert with the Buffalo Philharmonic orchestra at Niagara Falls and with Sinfonia da Camera in Handel’s Dixit Dominus. Melissa is a doctoral student of Professor Ollie Watts Davis.

Mark Eichenberger was one of 30 musicians from around the world (including six from the United States) recently selected to compete at the International Tromp Competition in the Netherlands in November 2010. Tromp is a competition for students in the final stages of their professional degrees. He was chosen on the basis of recordings he submitted to an adjudication panel of internationally important percussionists.

Yohei Endo gave organ recitals at Christ Church in Tacoma, Washington in April and at St. Mark’s Cathedral in Seattle in July 2010. A master’s student of Professor Dana Robinson in organ performance, Yohei currently serves as organist at McKinley Presbyterian Church in Champaign.

Olivia Flanigan, a senior jazz studies major, was honored by Downbeat magazine with an award for Outstanding Vocal Jazz Performance in its Student Music Award category in June 2010. In May, Olivia performed with the UI Jazz Vocal Ensemble, under the direction of Darden Purcell, at the New York Voices Jazz Festival competition. This was the inaugural performance of the new ensemble. Olivia is a student of Darden Purcell and Professor Chip McNeill.

Stephanie Gustafson is the winner of the Illinois State American String Teachers Association (ASTA) Solo Competition. As a result, she will be one of two Senior Division winners representing Illinois in the semi-final round of the ASTA biennial National Solo Competition. Stephanie was also selected to participate in the 2010 Saratoga Harp Colony in New York. The senior in harp performance is a student of Professor Ann Yeung.

Desirée Hassler, a D.M.A. candidate in vocal performance and student of Professor Jerold Siena, was offered a three-year contract as a full-time soprano in the chorus of the Lyric Opera of Chicago. Desirée is the 2010 recipient of the Jerry Hadley Memorial Award.

Catherine Hennessey, a master’s student of Professor Thomas Turino in ethnomusicology, read her paper “Playing with Pianos: Print Media, Mechanization, Gender, and Change in Victorian America” at the AMS Midwest Chapter meeting held at National-Louis University in Chicago, in October 2010. Catherine authored “Inside the Early Issues,” a sidebar to Professor Christina Bashford’s article on the history of The Strand for the magazine’s 120th anniversary issue.

Chen-Yu Huang was the winner of the 2010 Krannert Center for the Performing Arts Debut Artist competition, the first harpist ever to win the award. Chen-Yu was also the 2010 recipient of the Kate Neal Kinley Memorial Fellowship awarded by the College of Fine and Applied Arts. The doctoral candidate is a student of Professor Ann Yeung.

Peter Huang, a junior harp student of Professor Ann Yeung, participated in the 2010 Midwest Masterworks Christian Music Festival in Winona Lake, Indiana. During the festival he was selected to perform in the Honors Recital.

Art Joslin, a D.M.A. student in vocal performance, presented his paper “Teaching Formant Tuning to the Pre-Collegiate Male Singer” at the Sixth Annual New Voice Educators Symposium held at Indiana University Jacobs School of Music (February 12-13, 2010). The symposium, which drew voice educators and specialists from across the country, was sponsored by NATS. Art, who is a student of Professor Jerold Siena, was also selected by the NATS board of directors as a recipient of this year’s Independent Teacher Fellowship. As a winner, he was invited to attend the association’s national conference in Salt Lake City, Utah (July 2–6, 2010). This opportunity included attendance at artist recitals, master classes and sessions on all aspects of singing and the teaching of singing, as well as a chance to network with some of the nation’s finest professionals in the field.

Eun-Joo Ju, D.M.A. organ student of Professor Dana Robinson, performed at Indianapolis’ Christ Church Cathedral in April 2010. She is currently serving as organist at North Shore United Methodist Church in Glenco, Illinois.

Duck Yong Kim won first place in the Barry Alexander International Vocal Competition. Duck Yong sang on the Winners’ Recital at Carnegie Hall in New York City on January 24, 2010. He is a doctoral student of Professor Cynthia Haymon-Coleman.

Chee-Kang Koh, a doctoral candidate in music education, had his paper “The Experience
Seihee Lee, a graduate student in vocal performance, won the first prize and the grand prize in the young artist division of the 2010 Bel Canto Foundation's annual opera contest, held on April 17, 2010. Last year, Lee won second place in the competition. Seihee's performances of "Il Bacio" and a selection from La Traviata earned her the grand prize of $7,500 this year. Prior to winning the Bel Canto Contest, she won first prize in Division Two of the New York Lyric Opera Theatre's Vocal Competition, held March 20 in New York City. Seihee is a student of Professor Cynthia Haymon-Coleman.

Gina Leija is a master's student in flute performance. Gina, a student of Professor Jonathan Keeble, won a position in the United States Army Field band.

Dean Luethi, a D.M.A. candidate and student of Professor Fred Stoltzfus, was hired as a tenure-track assistant professor at Washington State University in Pullman, Washington. There he conducts the University Singers and Vojazz, the School of Music's vocal jazz ensemble. In addition, he teaches choral music methods and voice lessons, supervises student teachers, and is the university's choral music education specialist at Washington University.

Jackline Madegwa, a master's student of Professor Ollie Watts Davis, received the 2010-2011 Barbara Yates International Research Award from the Women and Gender in Global Perspectives Program and performed a recital for its 30th Anniversary Luncheon. Additionally, the soprano performed for the Champaign Branch of the NAACP- Act-SO program; traveled to Raleigh, North Carolina; and performed for the Kenyan Foundation in Atlanta, an organization that recognizes Kenyan musical artists living in the Diaspora. Jackline also served on the teaching staff for the Mo' Better Music summer camp, Upward Bound Summer Academy, and Canaan Baptist Church Vacation Bible School.

Zachary May, a senior in music education, appeared at the 2010 ASTA National Conference in Santa Clara, California. Zachary presented a session on Swedish folk music with Kalle Eriksson, a folk violinist and teacher from Sweden. The son of alumnus Joanne May (B.M.E. ’75, M.S. ’81), Zachary is a student of Professor Dmitry Kouzov.

Molly McKenzie, a senior in harp performance and music education, performed at the American Harp Society’s National Conference in Tacoma, Washington as part of The HarpCore 4. Molly is a student of Professor Ann Yeung.

Ryan Milstead is a second-year master's degree student in vocal performance and literature, won the Metropolitan Opera Central Region Finals held on November 8, 2010 in Evanston, Illinois. Winners of the regional auditions go to New York City to participate in the National Semi-Finals, which will be held on March 6, 2011 on the stage of the Met. Ryan was also the recipient this year of the Grace Wilson Award for Excellence in Singing and was selected for the Santa Fe Opera's Singer Apprentice Program this summer. Congratulations to Ryan and to his teacher Professor Ricardo Herrera.

Jason Mitchell, currently ABD in the D.M.A. composition program, had his composition End of Message, for electroacoustic music, jury-selected for the Electronic Music Midwest Festival in Kansas City, Kansas. Sklelp, was jury-selected for the New York City Electroacoustic Music Festival and the 2010 SEAMUS National Conference in St. Cloud, Minnesota. Jason is a student of Professor Scott Wyatt.

Alexandru Moraru, a teaching assistant and D.M.A. student of Professor Elliot Chasanov, won the principal trombone position of the Champaign-Urbana Symphony from a field of ten players, including professional players and professors from Bloomington (Indiana), Chicago, and Charleston (Illinois). Alexandru, a native of Romania, received his M.M. and Performer’s Certificate at Bowling Green State University, and his undergraduate degree from the Academia de Muzică Gheorghe Dima in Cluj, Romania.

Yoo Sun Nah, a D.M.A. candidate in vocal performance, won first place in the Oklahoma Metropolitan Opera Regional Auditions. Yoo Sun is a student of Professor Cynthia Haymon-Coleman.

Scott Nimner, a third-year undergraduate jazz trombone major, was nominated by the University of Illinois for a Beinecke Scholarship. Scott was also one of 21 selected from a field of over 300 musicians nationwide for the Disney All-American College Band. In 2008, Scott was awarded the Outstanding Jazz Arrangement award from jazz composer Jim McNeely at the Notre Dame Jazz Festival for his arrangement of "When I Fall in Love." Scott is currently the lead trombonist in the University of Illinois Concert Jazz Band, and is a member of the University of Illinois Jazz Trombone Ensemble I and the Glenn Wilson combo. He is co-leader of the progressive jazz sextet Eponymous, one of his primary compositional outlets. Scott currently studies trombone and composition with Professor Jim Pugh.

Sergei Pavlov, a choral conducting student in the D.M.A. program, worked as assistant conductor and principal chorus master on a production of Scott Joplin’s Treemonisha at Le Théâtre du Châtelet in Paris. The production featured Grace Bumbry, Sir Willard White, and Christin-Marie Hill (M.M. ’06) in leading roles. Christin-Marie, a former student of Professor Cynthia Haymon-Coleman and a graduate of the San Francisco Opera’s Merola Program, was a vocal fellow at the Tanglewood Music Center from 2006 to 2008. In May 2010, Sergei made his conducting debut at the Spoleto Festival USA in Charleston, South Carolina. When he returns to Charleston next summer, he will assist artistic director Joseph Flummerfelt (D.M.A. ’71); conduct the festival orchestra; and serve as assistant conductor for the new production of the opera The Medium by Gian Carlo Menotti. The production is in honor of the 100th anniversary of the composer, who is also founder of the festival.

Jacqueline Piccolino, a freshman vocal performance major, won second place and...
$2,000 in the annual Bel Canto Foundation Opera Contest with her performances of “Per pietà, bell’ido mio” and “Nel suo amore.” Just one week prior, Jacqueline won Division Three of the NATS vocal competition on April 10, 2010. In March, she won the first round of the Classical Singer Competition, sponsored by Classical Singer Magazine, and advanced to the second round of the competition held May 28th in New York City. The soprano is a student of Professor Cynthia Haymon-Coleman and a recipient of a Thomas J. Smith scholarship.

Phil Pierick (B.M. ’09) won the Young Artist Solo Woodwind competition sponsored by the Music Teachers National Association (MTNA) at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb. His winning performance was accompanied by D.M.A. candidate Kevin Lam. Phil will represent Illinois in the MTNA regional competition in January 2011. He is a first-year master’s degree student in Professor Debra Richtmeyer’s saxophone studio.

Darden Purcell, doctoral student of Professor Chip McNeill, released her debut album, Easy Living, in fall 2009. The CD, which features musicians Chip McNeill, Chip Stephens, Shawn Purcell, Dennis Carroll, and Stockton Helbing, has received national radio airplay and a review in The Chicago Jazz Magazine. It continues to be a top seller in the jazz categories on CDBaby.com, reaching #8 for all jazz albums, #3 for vocal jazz, and #1 for vocalese. Darden is currently the director of the University of Illinois Jazz Vocal Ensemble and, in spring 2010, she directed the ensemble in the New York Voices Jazz Festival. In June 2010, her voice student Olivia Flanigan won a DownBeat Student Music Award for “Outstanding College Performance” in the vocal jazz category.

M. Anthony Reimer, D.M.A. candidate in music composition and student of Professor Scott Wyatt, had an electroacoustic composition, untitlededededede, jury-selected for the New York City Electroacoustic Music Festival as well as the Electronic Music Midwest Festival in Kansas City, Kansas.

Ryan Ross, Ph.D. candidate in musicology, presented his paper “Trouble in Paradise: Vaughan Williams’s ‘Flos Campi’ Reconsidered” at the Fourth Biennial NABMSA Conference at Drake University last summer.

He is currently instructor of music history at Millikin University. Ryan is an advisee of Professor Gayle Magee.

Jacob “Jake” Rundall, a D.M.A. candidate in music composition, was honored with a jury selection for his composition ...in tatters at the Sound, Sight, Space and Play 2010 Music Festival, at the Technology and Innovation Research Centre, De Montfort University, Leicester, UK. Jake is a student of Professor Scott Wyatt.

Ju Ri Seo, a doctoral candidate in composition, received the 21st Century Piano Commission Award. Her composition iff, for piano with electroacoustic music, was performed at the 21st Century Piano Commission Concert at Krannert Center for the Performing Arts. iff was also jury-selected for performance at the SEAMUS National Conference in St. Cloud, Minnesota. Ju Ri’s electroacoustic composition Them was jury-selected for performance at the SCI Student National Conference in Huntington, West Virginia. She is also a finalist of the Rapidol Competition and recipient of the 2010 SoundScape Summer Festival Composition Prize. In 2010, her Kontrabass for baritone saxophone and electronics was performed at the North American Saxophone Alliance Conference in Athens, Georgia, and Four for flexatones was published by Bachovich Music Publications. Ju Ri is a student of Professor Scott Wyatt.

Jae Eun “Jenny” Shin, a junior in flute performance, is the winner of the Illinois Flute Society Young Artist Competition. She is also among ten musicians invited to compete in the Yamaha Young Artist Competition. A student of Professor Jonathan Keeble, Jenny was named a winner of the 2010 Musical Merit Foundation Competition.

Timothy Spellbring performed at Christ Church Cathedral in Indianapolis in April 2010. Timothy, a third-year doctoral student, is a member of Professor Dana Robinson’s organ studio.

Daniel Swiley’s electroacoustic composition, Pathfinder, was jury-selected for the Electronic Music Midwest Festival in Kansas City, Kansas in 2009. In 2010, Pathfinder was jury-selected for the NoiseFloor Festival along with the SEAMUS National Conference in St. Cloud, Minnesota. Daniel, a student of Professor Scott Wyatt, is a fourth-year doctoral candidate in music composition.

Yu-Chi Tai is a D.M.A. candidate in piano performance and a student of Prof. Ian Hobson. In May 2008, she won first prize in the Bradshaw and Buono International Piano Competition in New York, and gave a debut recital in Weill Recital Hall at Carnegie Hall. In 2010, Yu-Chi won first prize in the Kankakee Valley Symphony Orchestra Piano Concerto Competition and performed the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto No. 2 with the Kankakee Valley Symphony Orchestra. In July, she won sixth prize in the World Piano Competition in Cincinnati. She was also invited to participate in the Fall Music Creative Residency at the Banff Center in Canada in October 2010.

Justin Vickers (B.M. 96), a D.M.A. voice and Ph.D. musicology candidate, returned to Moscow for performances and a recording of the November 2010 premiere of Alexander Zhurbin’s Fourth Symphony, City of the Plague, with the State Symphony Capella of Russia, conducted by Valery Polyansky. The performance was in the Moscow International House of Music’s Svetlanov Hall, the largest concert hall in Russia. In April, the tenor will perform concerts of Joseph Summer’s Shakespeare Settings at Boston’s Jordan Hall and then record them for a 2011 Albany Records release. During the 2010-2011 season, he will also travel to Philadelphia to premiere War Wedding, a song cycle composed for him by Tony Solitro. In July 2010, Justin delivered a paper on Michael Tippett, war memorialization, and song to the Conference of the North American British Music Studies Association at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa. He also spent a month last summer in England studying with Neil Mackie at the Royal Academy of Music (RAM), and conducting research in the RAM archives and at the British Library. His dissertation advisor is Professor Christina Bashford.

Noël Wan, a freshman harp student of Professor Ann Yeung, won first prize and the Aaron Ziegel, a Ph.D. candidate in musicology, published his article “One Person, One Music: Reconsidering the Duke-Dukelsky Musical Style” in the Fall 2010 issue of the journal American Music. Recently, he won the National Opera Association’s scholar’s paper competition and will receive the Leland Fox Award to present his paper, “Enacting the Nation on Stage: Style, Subjects, and Themes in American Opera Librettos of the 1910s,” at the association’s annual convention in San Antonio, Texas, in January 2011. This paper will subsequently be published in The Opera Journal. Aaron is an advisee of Professor Gayle Magee.

Yuan Zhou, mezzo-soprano and D.M.A. student of Sylvia Stone, was a production intern this fall on the premiere staging of the opera Madame White Snake by Chinese-American composer Zhou Long. Co-commissioned by the Boston Lyric Opera and the Beijing Music Festival, it was the first major opera to be commissioned and produced in Boston since maverick impresario Sarah Caldwell presented Gunther Schuller's The Fisherman and His Wife nearly 40 years ago. Zhou worked as an assistant on the original production when it was taken to Beijing, China for the Asian premiere on October 27, 2010. Her job included translating and helping prepare the subtitles; working closely with the producer, director, scenic designer, and stage manager to overcome language barriers and culture differences; and assisting the creative team with expressing their artistic thoughts and directions to Chinese co-workers. Being part of an American team in a Chinese theater and seeing an American-made opera with a Chinese theme in a different cultural light was an exciting and valuable experience for Yuan.

The 2010-2011 Chancellor’s Scholars in music are: freshman Erin Brooker (harp performance); junior Kelsey Cunningham (music education); junior Brendan Doshi (jazz performance); junior Colin Drozdoff (jazz performance); freshman Rebecca Emory (instrumental music); sophomore Emily Malamud (music education); senior Alek Mann (music education); and junior Karen Wanner (music education). Congratulations to these students for undertaking the challenge of completing the additional requirements for the Campus Honors Program concurrently with their music requirements!

The big event for the jazz division students this year was the recording of Freeplay, the latest U of I Concert Jazz Band CD featuring compositions and arrangements by members of the ensemble (17 in all!) in a double-CD format scheduled for release in December 2010. The recording was done in April 2010 at the Lodge Studios in Indianapolis, Indiana. The University of Illinois Harp Quartet, comprised of current UI students Stephanie Gustafson, Peter Huang, and Lisa Kahn, and UI alumna Katherine Denler, performed at the 2010 September 11th School of Music Memorial Concert. The concert included works by J.S. Bach and M. Giacchino, arranged for harp quartet by faculty member Ann Yeung, plus arrangements of music by Debussy and Fauré.

An outstanding contingent of over 25 current and former saxophonists from the UI School of Music, led by Professor Debra Richtmeyer, traveled to Athens, Georgia to attend the North American Saxophone Alliance (NASA) Biennial Conference (March 3–6, 2010). The UI Large Saxophone Ensemble premiered two works by Professors Erik Lund and Stephen Taylor. In the North American Saxophone Alliance Solo Competition, graduate saxophone performance majors Dave Tribbley and Jim Spigner placed in the solo finals (top six out of sixty), and the UI Graduate Saxophone Quartet (Delirium Quartet) placed in the saxophone quartet finals (top six of twenty-five), receiving an Honorable Mention. Members of the UI Delirium Quartet are: Collin Wilson (D.M.A. candidate, soprano saxophone); Dave Tribbley (M.M. ’10, alto saxophone); Heidi Radtke Sibeck (M.M. ’10, tenor saxophone); and Drew Whiting (D.M.A. candidate, baritone saxophone). In addition, Chip McNeill, jazz saxophone professor and director of jazz studies at UI, was invited to solo with the UGA Jazz Band on the Friday night concert. Besides the many solo and chamber music performances and competitions, there were also master classes by renowned professionals Frederick Hemke, Eugene Rousseau, Steve Mauk, Jonathan Helton, Joe Lulloff, Cliff Leaman, and Debra Richtmeyer.

The UI Graduate Saxophone Quartet (Crane Alley Quartet) won second place in the MTNA State Chamber Competition held in DeKalb, Illinois in November 2010. Students in the Crane Alley Quartet are Phil Pierick, Jesse Dochnahl, Drew Whiting, and Jim Spigner. All quartet members are from the saxophone studio of Professor Debra Richtmeyer.
Djordjevic Wins Grand Prix du Disque

Pianist Alexander Djordjevic (B.M. ’88, M.M. ’95) is the 2010 winner of the Hungarian Liszt Society’s 35th Annual Franz Liszt International Grand Prix du Disque for his latest CD, Gray Clouds: Piano Music of Franz Liszt. He joins an esteemed list of notable pianists who have received this honor, including Vladimir Horowitz, Claudio Arrau, Alfred Brendel, and André Watts. Djordjevic received the award and performed a recital on the anniversary of Liszt’s birth on October 22, 2010, at the Old Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, Hungary.

“This CD of Liszt’s later works is unique,” the pianist wrote in a recent email, “because, when people think of Franz Liszt, they think of pieces like Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, which is flashy and showy. A lot of his music is introspective—slow, quiet, and extremely thoughtful. I felt the world needed to hear this different side of Liszt and how much depth there is in his music.”

In a review in the August 2009 issue of Gramophone, Jed Distler wrote that “Djordjevic brings great subtlety to this well programmed Liszt disc.” And the music writer suggests specific passages for the listener to consider: “Listen to the first Elegie’s carefully gauged climaxes, the subtle gradations in tone that help flesh out Nuages gris’s sparse textures, the warm legato that embraces Romance oubliée’s soft chords, or how the pianist imbues the Bagatelle ohne Tonart’s grace notes with a convincing jazzy flair.”

Djordjevic performs as a concert pianist as well as a recording artist, and is on the piano faculty of the Music Institute of Chicago and College of DuPage. As a Fulbright Scholar, he studied under Russian pianist and pedagogue Vitaly Margulis at the Hochschule für Musik in Freiburg, Germany. For more information regarding his recordings and upcoming performance schedule, visit his website, AlexanderDjordjevic.com.

Former Director McDowell Celebrates 90 Years of Music

Professor Emeritus Austin McDowell (B.M. ’44, M.M. ’46), who retired as director of the School of Music in 1988, celebrated his 90th birthday on September 15, 2010.

His long career in music at the University of Illinois began as an undergraduate clarinetist. His training was interrupted, however: during World War II, he served as a Navy pilot, flying a Curtiss SB2C-4 Helldiver off the carrier Shangri-La in the Pacific theater. After returning to the University to complete his graduate studies, he began his teaching career as a woodwind instructor in the School of Music and University Bands in 1946, when Professor Keith Wilson (B.M.E. ’38, B.M. ’39), his clarinet teacher, took a position at Yale.

While on the faculty, McDowell was a clarinetist with the Woodwind Quintet and the Champaign-Urbana Symphony, in addition to being active as a clinician, soloist, and participant in national wind instrument societies. At his urging, a saxophone teacher was hired for the first time, and a saxophone major was approved. In 1976, he moved into administration, serving as assistant director under Professor Robert Bays and later as director.

As a student, McDowell played first chair clarinet under Albert Austin Harding. After Harding’s death, McDowell and his wife, Ellen (née Ellen Attebury, B.F.A. ’47), purchased the historic Harding home on Elm Boulevard in Champaign and raised their family there. On the Fourth of July they have been known to display a banner reading, “JOHN PHILIP SOUSA SLEPT HERE”—an acknowledgment of Harding’s close friendship with Sousa and of the composer’s frequent visits to the Harding home.

The love of music still permeates McDowell’s life. He says he enjoys the performances at Krannert Center, especially the European orchestras, and cherishes his memories of the School of Music. Among his most treasured recollections, he says, are the respected musicians with whom he worked and the opportunities to meet visitors to the School, among them Igor Stravinsky, Paul Hindemith, and George Enescu. He recalls spending a memorable evening during which Enescu told him he had known Brahms! That, he says, remains with him as a shining moment. McDowell can be reached at ajmcdowe@illinois.edu.
Duckles Retires from Vancouver Symphony Orchestra

Lee Duckles (B.M. ’70) has announced his resignation as principal cellist of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra (VSO) in British Columbia, Canada. Duckles has performed with the VSO since his graduation from the University of Illinois in 1970.

While at Illinois, he was a student of cellist Peter Farrell and studied chamber music with John Garvey, Stanley Fletcher, and members of the Walden String Quartet. He was also a member of the UI Composition String Quartet, which made groundbreaking recordings in the 1960s for Heliodor and Polydor records, most notably of Lejaren Hiller’s Illiac Suite, the first string quartet written by computer. (Duckles recalls achieving great campus notoriety when, as a member of that quartet, he played Beatles tunes—this was the ‘60s!—at a formal composition recital in Smith Music Hall.) With the Illinois Contemporary Ensemble, he took part in recordings of Sal Martirano’s Octet, as well as the music of Herbert Brün and Edwin London.

The new music experiences and orchestral training Duckles received at Illinois had a profound effect on his future career choices. He recalls participating in performances under conductor Bernard Goodman of such repertoire as Bartók’s Miraculous Mandarin, Charles Ives’s Fourth Symphony, and Mahler’s Symphony No. 1, and in concerto appearances with UISO by such legends as Isaac Stern, Ruggiero Ricci, and Henryk Szeryng. While at Illinois, he participated in the North American premiere of György Ligeti’s Atmospheres; Gunther Schuller’s opera The Visitaton, which was conducted by the composer; and HPSCHD, John Cage’s multimedia extravagana, which was staged in the Assembly Hall during the composer’s guest residency.

After graduating, Duckles participated in master classes with cellists Mstislav Rostropovich, János Starker, and Harvey Shapiro, to name only a few. He has enjoyed an association with the Vancouver Academy of Music, The University of British Columbia, Vancouver New Music Society (as a founding performer), Masterpiece Music Series, Vancouver Chamber Players, and the contemporary music ensemble Days, Months, and Years to Come. He has recorded for the CBC (both as a performer and arranger), the Musical Heritage Society of America, Heliodor Records, and Skylark Records, with the salon music ensemble Viveza. An active teacher, chamber musician, and recitalist, he continues to participate in music festivals in British Columbia, Ontario, Alaska, Washington, California, Colorado, and South Korea. Since the 1980s, Duckles has served as the principal cellist of the Cabrillo Music Festival of Contemporary Music in California, where he has premiered a number of works for cello and orchestra and worked under the direction of Marin Alsop and Dennis Russell Davies, and with such composers as Aaron Copland, Hans Werner Henze, Lou Harrison, Philip Glass, John Adams, John Corigliano, and Aaron J. Kerns. He is currently the president of the Vancouver Cello Club.

PLANNED GIVING
CREATING A LEGACY OF EXCELLENCE

A significant portion of the School of Music’s annual gift income comes from realized bequests from our alumni and friends. Donors who remember the School of Music in their estate plans provide critical funding to establish scholarships, awards, fellowships, and other student and faculty support. During fiscal year 2010, the School of Music received nine gifts totaling $987,337 from the following estates or trusts:

Martha S. Beerman Trust
Josephine Daniel Trust
Howard A. Stotler Trust
W. Cornelius VanPappelendam Estate

The School of Music would like to recognize the following alumni and friends who have chosen to remember the School through a bequest, charitable trust, or other planned gift vehicle:

1950–1959
Roslyn Rensch (M.A. ‘59) visited the Urbana campus in November 2009 to view the exhibit “Roslyn Rensch: Harp Carvings and Irish Crosses,” displayed in the University Library’s Marshall Gallery. The exhibit was curated from the Roslyn Rensch Collection and Papers housed at the University of Illinois. The local American Harp Society chapter, named in her honor, presented a student recital on the occasion of Dr. Rensch’s visit.

1960–1969
Marcia Powell (B.M.E. ‘66, M.S. ‘68) received her bachelor’s and master’s degrees in music education, then taught music for two years at the University High School in Urbana. After moving to San Diego, she taught music at a junior high school for two years while performing with an avant-garde choral group. In 1974, she founded the Church of Scientology Choir in Los Angeles, which she directed for 25 years. She retired in 2003, but came out of retirement in 2009 to again take up directorship of the choir.

1970–1979
Jon Burr (B.M. ‘75), acoustic bassist, released a new CD at the Iridium jazz club in New York in April. After six months of arranging and rehearsing, his latest recording, Never My Love, with jazz vocalist Lynn Stein, is out on the jQ Media label, available through his website, and through CD Baby, Amazon, and iTunes. In the past year, he has appeared on Music from the Heart on Live365; Blues in the Grooves; The Coast Radio; and Unsigned Underground. Chuck Bolger of WMUH’s Jazz or Something Like It also wrote a terrific review of the new recording.

Mary Ferer (Ph.D. ’76), associate professor of music at West Virginia University, was elected program chair (2009-2011) of the Allegheny Chapter of the American Musicological Society and hosted the chapter’s annual meeting on the West Virginia campus. She was recently presented with the Outstanding Research Award by WVU’s Division of Music.

Dr. W. Gene and Mrs. Lynd W. Corley (B.M.E. ’59, M.S. ’61) hosted a reception for friends of the School of Music on August 8, 2010 at the Ravinia Festival following a performance of Mozart’s The Marriage of Figaro. The concert version of the opera, performed by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and conducted by Ravinia’s music director James Conlon, featured voice faculty member Nathan Gunn (B.M. ‘94) in the role of Count Almaviva. The Sunday matinee performance, beautiful location, and warm reception were enjoyed by everyone in attendance—including Ravinia Board Chairperson Pamela B. Strobel (B.S. ’74, J.D. ’77) and Russ Strobel (J.D. ’77). The School thanks the reception co-sponsors Gene and Lynd Corley, Dr. Paul and Mrs. Virginia Uhlenhop (B.M.E. ’59), and the College of Fine and Applied Arts for generous sponsorship of such a memorable afternoon at Ravinia.

Carrie Provost (right) with Carol Ourada (B.M.E. ’79) at the Illinois American String Teachers Association luncheon during the IMEA All-State Convention in Peoria. Carrie and Carol have been friends since they were students and did a recital together while undergraduates at Illinois; their daughters are also lifelong friends and play violin together in the Suzuki Program at Wheaton College.

Carrie (Driesbach) Provost (B.S. ’79), has been teaching strings for the past 30 years—the last 23 years in School District 200 in Wheaton, Illinois. She is currently orchestra director at Franklin Middle School, and at Hawthorne, Longfellow, Lowell, and Washington Elementary Schools. Carrie was named the “Outstanding School Orchestra Teacher” for Illinois in 2009.

Jan Prokop (M.M. ’76) maintains a private voice studio in Manhattan. Her concern for the state of the arts in the current educational climate led her to become a trustee of Arts Horizons, a non-profit organization that touches the lives of Daniel Adams (D.M.A. ’85) had two recordings of his compositions released in 2010: Diffusion One for marimba quintet (Music for Keyboard Percussions, McCormick Percussion Group, Ravello Records) and Extremities for solo xylophone (Bachovich Music Publications). He received world premieres of his compositions Intrusions, for oboe, bassoon, and piano (Trio 488, Texas State University, San Marcos) and From a Visible Darkness for contrabass solo (NACUSA Texas Chapter Conference, TSU, San Marcos). Brett Dietz performed Five Marimba Miniatures (Southern Regional Conference of the College Music Society, Loyola University, New Orleans), which included the premiere of three miniatures composed for him. Other performances of Adams’s work include Concerto for Euphonium and Percussion Quintet (Slippery Rock University, Pennsylvania; United States Army Band Tuba-Euphonium Conference, Ft. Myer, Virginia; and Emporia State University, Kansas). The University of Puget Sound Percussion Ensemble performed Camaraderie (Society of Composers, Inc., Region VIII Conference). Cameron Longobough performed Double Nostalgia for tenor saxophone, and the Kansas State University Percussion Ensemble performed Diffusion Two for snare drum quartet (SCI Region VI Conference, KSU, Manhattan).

Marva Carter (Ph.D. ’88) is the author of Swing Along: The Musical Life of Will Marion Cook, published by Oxford University Press in 2008. She is associate professor of music history and literature at Georgia State University.

Daniel E. Freeman (Ph.D. ’87) is the author of Josef Mysliveček, “Il Boemo”: The Man and His Music, published by Harmonie Park Press in 2009. Dr. Freeman lectures on music in the College of Continuing Education at the University of Minnesota, and at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., where he is a regular associate.

Steve Griggs (B.M. ’83), Seattle jazz composer and saxophonist, won a Longfellow Chorus Award of Distinction in the 2010 Longfellow Chorus International Composers Competition. The composition, which sets the poem “Moonlight” by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow for solo tenor voice and piano, premiered in Portland, Maine in February. In 2009, Steve composed seven new works for his Bumbleshoot 2009 performance; was featured as a soloist on the Bungie/Microsoft video game Halo 3: ODST; and set poems of Seattle sculptor James Washington for gospel soloist. Steve writes for and performs with Milo Petersen’s Jazz Disciples. He is currently arranging works of Heitor Villa-Lobos for jazz chamber ensemble and working on a book about saxophonist Joe Brazil.

Mark Gustavson (B.M. ’81) released a new EP single of his composition Chiftetelli for clarinet, two violins, viola, and cello. The performance is by members of Contempo. The recording, published by C. F. Peters Corporation (New York), can be downloaded through iTunes, Amazon, and all major download sites. Ted Shen of the Chicago Tribune described the new work as “an adroitly constructed compendium of tantalizing rhythmic variations.”

Alice Hanson (Ph.D. ’80) published the article “Czerny’s Vienna” in Beyond the Art of Finger Dexterity: Reassessing Carl Czerny, ed. David Gramit (University of Rochester Press, 2008). Dr. Hanson is professor of music at St. Olaf College.

Rita Steblin (Ph.D. ’81) is co-author, with Gerhard Stradner, of Schubert in Währing, published by the Bezirksmuseum Währing (Austria). She also published articles entitled “Schubert’s Pepi: His Love Affair with the Chambermaid Josepha Pöcklhofer and Her Surprising Fate” (in the Musical Times); “The Child Schubert in Conrad Graf’s Piano Workshop in Währing” (The Schubertian: Journal of the Schubert Institute); and “Viennese Woodwind Makers in the Classical Era, with emphasis on Friedrich Lempp’s request for protection in 1768” (Journal of the American Musical Instrument Society).

Peter J. Wood (B.S. ’89), associate professor of trumpet at the University of South Alabama in Mobile, was an active participant at the International Trumpet Guild conference in Sydney, Australia. During the July 2010 event, his USA Trumpet Ensemble played a prelude performance for a concert by the Sydney Brass; he performed the world premiere of Robert J. Bradshaw’s The Concept of Anxiety for trumpet and piano; one of his students competed in the ITG Youth Solo Competition; and he taught a trumpet master class at The Music Place. In addition to his teaching and performing duties at the University of South Alabama, Dr. Wood serves as editor of the Recording Reviews column for the International Trumpet Guild Journal. After completing his undergraduate degree in music education, he earned the M.M. degree at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and his D.M.A. degree at Indiana University, both in trumpet performance.

Andrew Bawden (B.M. ’98) is a member of the Resident Artist Training Program of Tri-Cities Opera in Binghamton, New York. Roles with Tri-Cities Opera include Melchor (Amahl and the Night Visitors), Marullo (Rigoletto), Bob (The Old Maid and the Thief), Valentín (Faust), and Count Almaviva (Le Nozze di Figaro). Upcoming appearances with the company include Angelotti (Tosca) and Simone (Gianni Schicchi).

Benjamin Bunsold (M.M. ’98) was a guest vocalist at a Christmas party in 2009 for former President George W. Bush and his family. The party was hosted by pianist Van Cliburn at his home in Fort Worth, Texas. Other 2009 performances included concert performances with the Odessa (Texas) Symphony, the Odessa College Wind Ensemble, and the Odessa College Jazz Ensemble. Bunsold also performed with the Colorado Symphony Orchestra, the Colorado Symphony Wind Ensemble, and the Colorado Symphony Brass Quintet. He also performed with the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra, the Fort Worth Opera, the Fort Worth Opera Chorus, the Fort Worth Chamber Singers, the Fort Worth Barbershop Singers, and the Fort Worth Chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing (NATS-NYC). After earning a Master of Music degree at the University of Illinois, she received her Doctor of Music degree from Indiana University.
Alumni News

included Beppe in I Pagliacci for Opera Columbus; Alfred in Die Fledermaus for Opera Delaware and for Arbor Opera; tenor soloist in Carmina Burana for Southern Arizona Symphony; and guest soloist for the Opera Columbus Summer Concert Series. He also covered Rinuccio in Gianni Schicchi for Opera Tampa, sang Ferrando in Così fan tutte for Shreveport Opera, and performed for Opera Memphis in various concerts throughout Tennessee and Mississippi. Upcoming 2010 engagements include singing Ferrando for St Petersburg Opera and Rinuccio for Winter Opera St. Louis. Bursold is managed by Stephens Artists Management. While at U of I, he studied with Nicholas DiVirgilio and John Wustman.

Virginia Danielson (Ph.D. ’91) is author of the article “The Voice of Egypt,” included in Music, Word, and Voice: A Reader, ed. by Martin Clayton (Manchester University Press, 2008). Dr. Danielson is Richard F. French Music Librarian at Harvard University.

Barry Hearn (M.M. ’98), trombone performance graduate and former student of Elliot Chasanov, was appointed acting principal trombonist of the National Symphony Orchestra for the 2009-2011 seasons by music director Christoph Eschenbach. Hearn won the assistant principal trombone position in 2009.

Laura Bischoff Renninger (Ph.D. ’99), associate professor and coordinator for music history at Shepherd University, currently teaches courses in music psychology, world music, and women in music, and is accompanist for the Three Wind Trio. She recently also started the Shepherd Gamelan Ensemble.

Daniel Schuetz (M.M. ’93), countertenor, gave guest-artist recitals and master classes at Illinois State University, Marygrove College, and Illinois Wesleyan University; sang Bach’s Mass in B Minor with the ISU orchestra and choirs; performed in the Illinois Shakespeare Festival, the Ann Arbor Festival of Song, The Kornar Arts Series and the Fairmount Music Series in Cleveland, the I.B.F. Music Series and the St. John’s Music series in Bloomington/Normal; gave a recital at the Carnegie Museum of Art in Pittsburgh with Opera Theatre Pittsburgh; and sang Tolomeo in Giulio Cesare in Egitto with the Baroque Orchestra of New Jersey. Schuetz was recently featured on the WILL-FM public radio program Live and Local, hosted by Kevin Kelly (M.M. ’93). While a University of Illinois student, he studied with Professors Ronald Hedlund and Eric Dalheim.

Mei Zhong (D.M.A. ’99), has been promoted to the rank of full professor at Ball State University. Her latest book and recording, Traditional and Modern Chinese Art Songs, Volume II, was published last fall and was favorably reviewed in the Journal of Singing. Professor Emeritus John Walter Hill, her dissertation adviser, is Mei’s professional mentor.

2000–2010

David Anderson (M.M. ’06) was recently appointed Music Director of the Lake Geneva Symphony Orchestra in Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. He also serves on the artistic staff of the Elgin Youth Symphony Orchestra in Elgin, Illinois, as conductor of the Philharmonia and as director of the Chamber Music Institute. David is an adjunct instructor of piano at Beloit College in Wisconsin. While at the University of Illinois, David was a student of Donald Schleicher.

Keturah Bixby (B.M. ’08) received her M.M. degree in horn performance from Yale University and has started a Ph.D. in cognitive science at the University of Rochester, focusing on research in the areas of music and language. In September 2009, she performed at Carnegie Hall with the Yale Orchestra, accompanying clarinetist David Shifrin in Copland’s Clarinet Concerto. September 2009, she performed at Carnegie Hall with the Yale Orchestra, accompanying clarinetist David Shifrin in Copland’s Clarinet Concerto. The concert was favorably reviewed in the New York Times.

Chris Combest (D.M.A. ’09), lecturer in tuba/euphonium and music theory at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, was named as a finalist for the Clifford Bevan Award for Excellence in Research by the International Tuba Euphonium Association (ITEA). The biennial award recognizes researchers whose work illustrates the highest level of artistry and scholarship in the area of tuba and euphonium. Dr. Combest also contributed an instructional video entitled “Practice Room Strategies” to the Power Lessons with the Pros video series sponsored by ITEA. He is among a select group of individuals chosen for the project, which includes internationally renowned solo artists and leading tuba/euphonium professors from the U.S.

Katherine Denler (B.M. ’10) was awarded the Anderson Insurance Scholarship to attend the 2010 American Harp Society National Conference in Tacoma, Washington. She was a counselor and intern for the 2010 Young Artists Harp Seminar. She is now a master’s student in harp performance at the Indiana University Jacobs School of Music.

Jason Fahrenbach (B.M.E. ’07) is director of traditional music at First Presbyterian Church of La Grange, and is in his fourth year of teaching at Lincoln Junior High School in Skokie, Illinois. He would like to acknowledge Professors Joe Grant and Chet Alwes for their contributions to his career in choral conducting.

Eric Fenger (D.M.A. ’05) is composing in Homer, Alaska, where he has a guitar studio and teaches a guitar ensemble class at the University of Alaska.

Thomas Forde (B.M. ’05), bass-baritone, was awarded a one-year contract to sing with Opernhaus Zürich, following a three-month return engagement as a second-year apprentice artist with the Santa Fe Opera. Other recent engagements brought him to Seattle Opera, The Dallas Opera, Fort Worth Opera, Shreveport Opera, and Skylight Opera. He was also filmed for a reality documentary series called The Invested Life, which will air on a weekly basis on MSNBC. The first episode and an introduction to his story are available at http://theinvestedlife.msn.com. His family and friends are involved, so take a look if you have a moment. Daniel Fry (B.S. ’95, M.S. ’03, D.M.A. in progress) is a staff accompanist at the University of Missouri-St. Louis. He also serves as adjunct professor of piano at St. Charles Community College (MO), adjunct professor of piano at the Community Music School of Webster University, and as director of choirs at First United Methodist Church, St. Charles (Missouri). Recent chamber music recitals and performances have taken place at Augustana College (Illinois), Culver-Stockton College (Missouri), Loyola University (Louisiana), University of Missouri-St. Louis, and Indiana State University. He is also the choral department accompanist at O’Fallon Township High School in O’Fallon, Illinois.

Moon Young Ha (B.M. ’08, M.M. ’10) had his electroacoustic composition Amorphisms, with video animation by Dennis H. Miller, jury selected for the 2009 International Computer Music Conference in Montréal, Québec, Canada; the 2009 Electronic Music Midwest Festival in Kansas City; the 2010 SCI Region VI Conference in Manhattan, Kansas; the 2010 Intermedia
J. Michael Holmes (M.M. ’06, D.M.A. in progress) was hired as director of marketing for saxophones at Conn-Selmer, Inc. in Elkhart, Indiana. In his new post, Holmes oversees and evaluates market research, including financial, technological, and demographic factors. He researches, analyzes, and recommends saxophone product improvements and features based on market demand, and works with engineering, production, and foreign suppliers to innovate, manufacture, and deliver new products. He also recommends product positioning and pricing to assure profitability and market share. In the area of advertising and promotion, he directs educational clinics and represents Conn-Selmer at key trade shows. Michael is a member of Professor Debra Richtmeyer’s studio.

Claire Happel (B.M. ’04), founding member of the harp, mandolin, and guitar trio Noble Fowl (noblefowl.com), received a Wicker Park Bucktown Community Grant and Chicago Department of Cultural Affairs Community Arts Assistance Program (CAAP) Grant to present a trio concert in August 2010, including performances of works by Hans Werner Henze, R. Murray Schafer, Martin Bresnick, and Matthew Welch; a workshop performance of a collaborative composition by John Cage, Virgil Thomson, Henry Cowell, and Lou Harrison; and world premieres by Lainie Fefferman and Nomi Epstein. Claire was also the harpist at the Grand Hotel on Mackinac Island, Michigan for the 2010 season.

Jamie Hillman (M.M. ’10) is pursuing a doctorate at Boston University, where in addition to his studies, he works as a research assistant to Professor André de Quadros and teaches in the composition and theory department. Before moving to Boston, Jamie served as lecturer in voice at Prairie Bible College in Alberta, Canada. At BU, he has conducted both the Concert Chorus and Boston University Women’s Chorale. His collaboration with de Quadros has resulted in numerous choral editions of pieces from Syria, Iraq, Indonesia, Cuba, and Venezuela published by earthesongs and Hinshaw Music, Inc. He is choir director and worship leader at Grace Chapel in Lexington, Massachusetts; accompanist and assistant conductor of the Gordon College Symphonic Chorale in Wenham; and accompanist for the Rhode Island Children’s Chorus. He recently accompanied the award-winning chorus at the 2010 Eastern Division Conference of the American Choral Directors Association in Philadelphia.

Claire Happel

Julia Kay Jamieson (M.M. ’02) has been appointed adjunct harp instructor at Illinois Wesleyan University. This past April, she performed Debussy’s Danses as a soloist with the Illinois Symphony Orchestra. Her piece bot.ga for multiple harps was premiered at the Illinois Summer Harp Class in June. The Jocelyn Chang Harp Ensemble of Cleveland, Ohio has just commissioned a piece from her. She continues to perform as principal harpist of the Illinois Symphony, Heartland Festival Orchestra, Danville Symphony, and Millikin Decatur Symphony, and as substitute principal harp for the Cleveland Chamber Symphony.

Jing-I Jang (M.M. ’04, harp; M.M. ’06, piano; D.M.A. ’09) authored two articles on Elias Parish Alvars’ Norma Variations for harp and orchestra, published in the spring and fall 2010 issues of the World Harp Congress Review.

Elizabeth Jaxon (B.M. ’06) participated in the 17th International Harp Contest in Israel. Her blog covering the event attracted many readers, subsequently earning invitations to write for Harp Column and to blog the First International Harp Competition and Festival in the Netherlands in March. Her harp duo (atlanticharpduo.com) performed at the Théâtre de l’Île St. Louis and was invited to present the final concert of the 2010 International Harp Festival of Katowice, Poland, for which the duo prepared a narrated concert to commemorate Frédéric Chopin’s bicentennial. Jaxon also toured Europe with the Tehran Symphony Orchestra.

Travis Jürgens (M.M. ’09) was designated as conductor and music director of the Philharmonia of Greater Kansas City; he succeeded Andrés Franco as music director at the conclusion of the 2009-2010 season. Previously, Jürgens was founding music director of the United Orchestra of Urbana, and served as a conducting instructor with the Illinois Summer Youth Music program and as assistant conductor of the University of Illinois Opera Theatre’s production of Hansel and Gretel. He has also guest conducted the UI New Music Ensemble, the Illinois Valley Symphony Orchestra, the Illini Orchestra, and the IES Vienna Chamber Orchestra in Austria.

Soojeeong Lee (D.M.A. ’03) is now associate professor of music and coordinator of vocal studies at Texas Woman’s University in Dallas, whose faculty she joined in 2008. Dr. Lee teaches undergraduate and graduate voice, vocal pedagogy, and opera production.

President Michael Hogan performs as an honorary member of the Marching Illini drumline on the 100th Anniversary of Illinois Homecoming. A record number of 420 band alums returned to campus to participate in the halftime performance of the football game against Indiana University on October 23, 2010. Alumni News

Sarah Long (Ph.D. ’08) received a two-year Marie Curie IntraEuropean Fellowship, the most prestigious postdoctoral award in the European community, for research on confraternity liturgies in the 15th and 16th centuries. She is in her third year as a postdoctoral research fellow (Renaissance Plainchant) at the Alamire Foundation/International Centre for the Study of Music in the Low Countries, Katholieke Universiteit Leuven, Belgium. Her article “In Praise of St. Nicholas: Music, Text, and Spirituality in the Masses and Offices of Parisian Trade Confraternity Manuscripts” was published in the first issue of the new Journal of the Alamire Foundation (2009). She gave a presentation in the Cantus Planus session at the American Musicological Society Meeting in Philadelphia in November 2009.

Jie Lu (D.M.A. ’06), a member of the piano faculty at the University of Utah, was invited to serve on the jury of the Gina Bachauer Artists Piano Competition. In March, she performed a violin and piano recital at Washington State University with Charles Castelman, chair of the string department at Eastman School of Music. In July, she was invited to perform in the Shanghai World Expo Music Festival. Jie Lu is a former student of Professor William Heiles.

Charles W. Lynch III (M.M. ’02, D.M.A. ’09) co-authored a biographical article with faculty member Professor Ann Yeung on alumna Dr. Roslyn Rensch that was published in the summer 2010 issue of the American Harp Journal. His flute and harp duo, From the West, with flutist Kimberlye Goodman, performed recitals last spring in Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio. The Olivet Nazarene University (ONU) Harp Ensemble, directed and founded by Lynch, premiered his arrangement of Princess Themes at the ONU Harp Studio Recital in April 2010.

Patrizia Metzler (D.M.A. ’07) has been active in Paris, France where she is conductor of the symphonic choir of the Choeurs et Orchestres des Grandes Écoles (COGE). In January 2010, she formed the Bach Collegium Paris. This ensemble of singers and musicians presented three Bach cantatas at its inaugural concert in the Ste. Clotilde Basilica. Future concerts, presented three times annually, will focus on historically informed performance of works by Johann Sebastian Bach, Georg Philipp Telemann, and their contemporaries. Additionally, she has lectured at the Conservatoire de Musique et de Danse in Paris on Beethoven’s compositional practice, and at the international conference on Genetic Criticism organized by the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, where she presented a lecture on the implications of sketch annotations for performance of Beethoven’s choral and orchestral works.

Richard Todd Payne (M.M. ’93, D.M.A. ’01), opera baritone and associate professor of music at Missouri State University, was on the road in 2010 as a member of a national tour of Porgy and Bess. He sang the role of Crown. Dr. Payne also performed as a guest soloist this fall in the National Youth Concert at New York City’s Carnegie Hall. The invitation marks Payne’s second appearance in Carnegie Hall, but his debut there as a guest soloist. He is represented by Dietsch Artists International.

James Price (D.M.A. ’10) is the new director of the National Center of Arts in El Salvador, that nation’s flagship performing arts institution for music, theater, and dance. His duties involve fund raising, promotion, administrative work, and serving as a musical ambassador for the institution.

Ji-Yon Shim (D.M.A. ’04) is teaching cello at the university and at a music school in São Paulo, Brazil. She and a colleague are collaborating in a performance and publication project on the works of Brazilian composer Henrique Oswald (d. 1931), whose chamber music with violoncello Shim examined in her Illinois doctoral thesis, supervised by Herbert Kellman.

Charles Joseph Smith (M.M. ’95, D.M.A. ’02) performed as a solo pianist in salon-style recitals on three occasions in France: two in Frontignan, in 2008 and 2009, and the other a debut concert at the Château des Dominicaines in Ganges in 2009. He was chosen to perform in the 2008 Summer Piano Institute at the University of Illinois and selected to participate in the 2007 Workshop for Algorithmic Computer Music at the University of California at Santa Cruz. He also performed in multiple master classes at the 2006 International Keyboard Institute & Festival in New York, including a master class for Liszt specialist Leslie Howard. In 2007, Charles taught music appreciation for Communniversity on the UI campus. He maintains an active schedule as a church and classical accompanist, and as a composer.

Brittany Viola (B.M. ’09, B.M.E. ’09), a harpist and a former student of Ann Yeung, was selected through a competitive writing process to be a member of the Illinois Law Review, the UI College of Law’s top journal.

Andrew Watkins (B.M. ’04) was awarded the position of percussionist/assistant timpanist with the San Diego Symphony.

Katherine Werbiansky (B.M. ’09), a 2010 apprentice artist with the Sarasota Opera, was awarded the role of Papagena in the company’s production of Mozart’s The Magic Flute. Katherine is a former student of Professor Cynthia Haymon-Coleman.

Andrew Williams (M.M. ’01), trombone performance graduate and a former student of Professor Elliot Chasanov, was appointed second trombonist of the Reno Philharmonic in Reno, Nevada in January 2010.

Brandon Williams (M.M.E ’08) was the recipient of the 2009 Missouri Choral Directors Association Prelude Award, and a University of Missouri-Columbia Honors College Outstanding Teacher Award. He also served as conductor of the 2009 ISYM Jr. High Chorus. Under his direction, the Ladue Horton Watkins High School Women’s Ensemble was invited to perform at the 2010 Missouri Music Educators Association convention. Brandon teaches vocal music in the Ladue School District in St. Louis, Missouri, and holds positions on the artistic staff of the St. Louis Children’s Choirs and adjunct voice faculty at Maryville University.

The HarpCore 4, founded at UI and currently comprising senior Molly McKenzie, and UI alumni Claire Happel (B.M. ’04), Charles Lynch (M.M. ’02, D.M.A. ’09) and Julia Kay Jamieson (M.M. ’02), was featured at the American Harp Society’s National Conference in Tacoma, Washington in July 2010. The audience response was very enthusiastic.
HOMMAGE TO TWO GREAT MUSICIANS

Dr. Harry Begian (1921–2010)

We wish we could turn back the clock, take our places in the bassoon and percussion sections, and watch as the stage door opens. Dr. Harry Begian would stride briskly across the stage, leaning slightly forward as he walked. He would acknowledge the audience with a subtle nod, followed by an appreciative bow from the podium. Then a quick turn to the band, a surveying glance, a couple of soft-spoken words—his invitation to join him—a raise of the baton, and away we would go.

Musical moments like that are imbedded deep within our hearts and yet are as vividly alive in our memories as if the performance had just finished: Dances of Galánta, Fiesta del Pacifico, Don Juan, Lincolnshire Posy, Pines of Rome, Enigma Variations, Illini Fantasy.

Forty-two years ago, Dr. Hindsley and Professor Dan Perrino introduced Dr. Begian, then director of bands at Michigan State University, to a group of unsuspecting Illinois Summer Youth Music students. Two summers later, Dr. Begian returned to campus to conduct many of these same ISYM musicians as the newly appointed director of bands for the University of Illinois. Those and many other summer camp and festival band “Begian experiences” changed lives. As a result of the work of this dynamic teacher—a maestro in the fullest sense of the word—an abundance of young musicians, music majors and non-majors alike, were inspired to attend this University so they could play in the Illinois bands.

Dr. Begian had a magical gift that all conductors wish to possess: he could transform the sound of any band within minutes. That talent was based on his thorough knowledge of a score; his unique understanding of and appreciation for the tonal possibilities of a concert band; and his almost uncanny ability to diagnose even the slightest of musical problems and prescribe the proper cure. The “Begian sound” and “Begian balance” attracted listeners, players, and conductors from around the country to Illinois.

He was an intense, energetic man who was totally engaged with every musician (either by your choice or his will) in every measure and every note, not just at a technical level but at an artistic one as well. As a member of the band, all you had to do was to open your ears and to watch, and Dr. Begian would bring the essence of the music to your heart and mind, and make it part of you for a lifetime.

In the education world, he would probably be called old school. Former Illinois musicians describe him as being penetrating, intense, passionate, demanding, humorous, caring, expressive, riveting, reassuring, sincere, highly motivating, deeply appreciative, and loving. If there is one common memory that bonds together all musicians who performed under his baton—be it multiple times with the Illinois Band or just once—the look in his eyes is that unforgettable memory. Everything you needed to know about the music and your performance was in his eyes.

That he never asked more of his musicians than he was willing to give of himself will remain a standard of musical and teaching excellence to be forever revered as part of the Illinois Band heritage. Our gratitude and loyalty will forever be to you, Dr. Begian.

Jack H. McKenzie (1930–2010)

Jack Harris McKenzie, former dean of the College of Fine and Applied Arts and a founding member of the Percussive Arts Society, passed away on November 11, 2010, at age 80. He died peacefully on his birthday at his home in Bonita Springs, Florida, surrounded by his family, including his wife of 60 years, Patricia.

McKenzie was the first percussionist to be awarded a bachelor of music degree at the University of Illinois, where he was a student of Paul Price. Following graduation in 1954, he joined the faculty at Arizona State University, earned a master of arts in education degree, and played with both the Phoenix Symphony and the Civic Opera Company. In the fall of 1956, he returned to the University of Illinois to direct its percussion program; he held that post for the next 13 years. In 1971, he became dean of the College of Fine and Applied Arts. He retired from academia in 1990.

McKenzie taught percussion not only at Illinois but also at the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Michigan. In his work with young drummers, he was an advocate for the “matched grip” on the snare drum. He wrote in the Percussionist (vol. 1, no. 3, 1963), “A great many of the problems in teaching beginners stem from the unnatural left hand position. Our teaching time is filled with corrections of the left hand. With the matched grip special left hand problems are almost eliminated.” McKenzie also composed a number of solo and ensemble works and a method book for the beginning snare drummer.

A gifted conductor, McKenzie led the groundbreaking UI Percussion Ensemble that began with Paul Price. He was the first conductor of the University’s Contemporary Chamber Players, who performed widely in the U.S. and in Europe. In the sixties, he coordinated John Cage’s Music Circus and HPSCHD and also worked with Hall of Fame composer Harry Partch, conducting and filming Partch’s most famous work, U.S. Highball.

McKenzie was a great educator and a natural leader. From his days as president of the UI Concert Band and his chairmanship of the International Council of Fine Arts Deans to his directorship of the National Arts Education Research Center, he served with distinction and with a humility that endeared him to all. He understood the many benefits of international partnerships and established programs in Versailles, France, and Shanghai, China. Recognized for these and other global initiatives in 1981, McKenzie was awarded an Honorary Doctor of Philosophy degree from the China Academy, Taiwan.

—Professor Emeritus Thomas V. Siwe (B.M. ’63, M.M. ’66)

The family of Jack Harris McKenzie requests that memorial gifts be directed toward scholarships at the University of Illinois College of Fine and Applied Arts, and mailed to UI Foundation, P.O. Box 3429, Champaign, IL 61826, or the Percussive Arts Society, 110 W. Washington Street, Suite A, Indianapolis, IN 46204. A complete obituary can be found on the FAA website (http://faa.illinois.edu/) under FAA in the News.

If you would like to make a gift in memory of Dr. Harry Begian, send a check, payable to UIF/University Bands, with “Begian Fund” entered on the memo line, and mail it to UI Foundation, P.O. Box 3429, Champaign, IL 61826. To make a gift online, go to www.uif.illinois.edu/gifts/startgiving.asp, select “other,” then enter “Begian Fund” in the online field indicated.

*ISYM ACADEMY
The ISYM Academy is an accelerated track within the large ensemble program giving high-level performers a more rigorous musical experience.

Those selected for The Academy will participate in a college preparatory musical program including private lessons, repertoire classes, masterclasses, and chamber music—all coached by University of Illinois faculty. Participants are selected by recorded auditions. Recordings due May 2. For more information visit: www.music.illinois.edu/isym
